WILDLIFE RESTORATION PROJECTS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2670) to provide that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife-restoration projects, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the States, through their respective State fish and game departments, in wildlife-restoration projects as hereinafter set forth; but no money apportioned under this act to any State shall be expended therein until its legislature, or other State agency authorized by the State constitution to make laws governing the conservation of wildlife, shall have assented to the provision of this act and shall have passed laws for the conservation of wildlife which shall include a prohibition against the diversion of license fees paid by hunters for any other purpose, than the administration of said State fish and game department, except that, until the final adjournment of the first regular session of the legislature held after the passage of this act, the assent of the Governor of the State shall be sufficient. The Secretary of Agriculture and the State fish and game department of each State accepting the benefits of this act shall agree upon the wildlife-restoration projects to be aided in such State under the terms of this act and all projects shall conform to the standards fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this act the term "wildlife-restoration project" shall be construed to mean and include the selection, restoration, rehabilitation, and improvement of areas of land or water adaptable as feeding, resting, or breeding places for wildlife, including acquisition by purchase, condemnation, lease, or gift of such areas or estates or interests therein as are suitable or capable of being made suitable therefor, and the construction thereon or therein of such works as may be necessary to make them available for such purposes and also including such research into problems of wildlife management as may be necessary to efficient administration affecting wildlife resources, and such preliminary or incidental costs and expenses as may be incurred in and about such projects; the term "State fish and game department" shall be construed to mean and include any department or division of department of another name, or commission, or official or officials, of a State empowered under its laws to exercise the functions ordinarily exercised by a State fish and game department.

SEC. 3. An amount equal to the revenue accruing during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and each fiscal year thereafter, from the tax imposed by section 610, title IV, of the Revenue Act of 1932 (47 Stat. 169), as heretofore or hereafter extended and amended, on firearms, shells, and cartridges shall be set apart in the Treasury as a special fund to be known as "The Federal aid to wildlife-restoration fund" and is hereby appropriated and made available until expended for the purposes of this act. So much of such appropriation apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year. Any amount apportioned to any State under the provisions of this act which is unexpended or unobligated at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure on any project shall then be available for expenditure by the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out the provisions of the Migratory Bird Conservation Act.

SEC. 4. So much, not to exceed 8 percent, of the revenue covered into said fund in each fiscal year as the Secretary of Agriculture may estimate to be necessary for his expenses in the administration and execution of this act and the Migratory Bird Conservation Act shall be deducted for that purpose, and such sum shall be available therefor until the expiration of the next succeeding fiscal year, and within 60 days after the close of such fiscal year the Secretary of Agriculture shall apportion such part thereof as remains unexpended by him, if any, and make certificate thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State fish and game departments on the same basis and in the same manner as is provided as to other amounts authorized by this act to be apportioned among the States for such current fiscal year. The Secretary of Agriculture, after making the aforesaid deduction, shall apportion the remainder of the revenues in said fund for each fiscal year among the several States in the following manner, that is to say, one-half in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States and one-half in the ratio which the number of paid hunting-license holders of each State in the preceding fiscal year, as certified to said Secretary by the State fish and game departments, bears to the total number of paid hunting-license holders of all the States: Provided, That the apportionment for any one State shall not exceed the sum of $150,000 annually: Provided further, That where the apportionment to any State under this section is less than $15,000 annually, the Secretary of Agriculture may allocate not more than $15,000 of said fund to said State to carry out the purposes of this act when said State certifies to the Secretary of Agriculture that it has set aside not less than $5,000 from its fish and game funds or has made, through its legislature, an appropriation in this amount, for said purposes.

SEC. 5. Within 60 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and to each State fish and game department the sum which he has estimated to be deducted for administering and executing this act and the Migratory Bird Conservation Act and the sum which he has apportioned to each State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and on or before February 20 next preceding the commencement of each succeeding fiscal year shall make like certificates for such fiscal year. Any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall notify the Secretary of Agriculture to this effect within 60 days after it has received the certification referred to in this section. The sum apportioned to any State which fails to notify the Secretary of Agriculture as herein provided shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out the provisions of the Migratory Bird Conservation Act.

SEC. 6. Any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall by its State fish and game department submit to the Secretary of Agriculture full and detailed statements of any wildlife-restoration project proposed for that State. If the Secretary of Agriculture finds that such project meets with the standards set up by him and approves said project, the State fish and game department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall approve only such projects as may be substantial in character and design and the expenditure of funds hereby authorized shall be applied only to such approved projects and if otherwise applied they shall be replaced by the State before it may participate in any further apportionment under this act. Items included for engineering, inspection, and unforeseen contingencies in connection with any works to be constructed shall not exceed 10 percent of the cost of such works and shall be paid by the State as a part of its contribution to the total cost of such works. If the Secretary of Agriculture approves the plans, specifications, and estimates for the project, he shall notify the State fish and game department and immediately certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside so much of said fund as represents the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which sum so set aside shall not exceed 75 percent of the total estimated cost thereof. No payment of any money apportioned under this act shall be made on any project until such statement of the project and the plans, specifications, and estimates thereof shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 7. When the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any project approved by him has been completed or, if involving research relating to wildlife, is being conducted, in compliance with said plans and specifications, he shall cause to be paid to the proper authority of said State the amount set aside for said project: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, from time to time, make payments on said project as the same progresses; but these payments, including previous payments, if any, shall not be more than the United States' pro-rata share of the project in conformity with said plans and specifications. Any construction work and labor in each State shall be performed in accordance with its laws and under the direct supervision of the State fish and game department, subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with rules and regulations made pursuant to this act. The Secretary of Agriculture and the State fish and game department of each State may jointly determine at what times and in what amounts payments, as work progresses, shall be made under this act. Such payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, on warrants drawn by the Secretary of Agriculture against the said fund to such official or officials, or depository, as may be designated by State fish and game department and authorized under the laws of the State to receive public funds of the State.

SEC. 8. To maintain wildlife restoration projects established under the provisions of this act shall be the duty of the States according to their respective laws.

SEC. 9. Out of the deductions set aside for administering and executing this act and the Migratory Bird Conservation Act, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to be taken from the eligible lists of the civil service; to rent or construct buildings outside of the city of Washington; to purchase such supplies, materials, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus; and to incur such travel and other expenses, including purchase, maintenance, and hire of passenger-carrying motor vehicles, as he may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 10. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. The Secretary of Agriculture shall make an annual report to the Congress of the sum set apart in "The Federal aid to wildlife-restoration fund", giving detailed information as to the projects and expenditures therefor.

SEC. 12. This act shall be in force from the 1st day of July 1938.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Agriculture has reported favorably S. 2670, which is the companion bill of H. R. 7681, introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], chairman of the Special Committee on Wildlife.

Prior to the last few years we witnessed a gradual decrease in the duck population of North America, as well as in other phases of wildlife in the lakes and streams of these United States. It is a problem which is due to various causes, the most important ones being drought, flood, soil erosion, and the advance of civilization. Realizing the necessity of doing something to solve the problem of wildlife conservation in this country, sportsmen throughout the Nation and those in governmental positions are now turning their attention to action in lieu of a do-nothing policy.

The bill before us today seeks to aid in the restoration and the maintenance of wildlife through the construction of projects in the various States under a program of cooperation between the Federal Government and the States. Under this bill there is a joint activity of State and Federal agencies. For every State in the Union which passes legislation complying with this act, funds will be allocated to that State on the following basis: One-half in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States and one-half in the ratio which the number of paid hunting-license holders of each State bears to the total number of paid hunting-license holders of all the States.

The funds authorized to be set aside under this bill are not additional taxes levied against the taxpayer. In fact, there are no new taxes at all. The money is derived from the present nuisance tax on firearms, shells, and cartridges, which amounts to about $3,000,000 per year. Eight percent of this sum will be set aside for administrative purposes and the balance of it will be allocated as I have explained.

There is one other feature to which I should probably call your attention, and that is that no State can obtain this money until it passes a law against the diversion of license fees paid by hunters for any other purpose than the administration of the State fish and game department.

My colleagues, when this bill was first considered by the Committee on Agriculture I vigorously opposed its passage because of the unusual powers vested in the Secretary of Agriculture in the control of the project after it had been completed in the State. I saw no reason to change the Federal policy on grants to States; and, having had some experience with the Biological Survey, an agency of the Department of Agriculture, I had no hesitancy in reaching the very definite conclusion that it was for the best interests of the general welfare of the American people that all State responsibility and State sovereignty possible remain in the States rather than be transferred to some governmental agency in Washington, D. C.

Anyone who cares to examine carefully and cautiously the original bill before us, will find that the power was being transferred from the States to the Federal Government in a manner never dreamed of by the fathers who drafted the Constitution of this country. And, Mr. Speaker, fortunately for the sportsmen, fortunately for the migratory waterfowl, and fortunately for democratic government in this country, the dictatorial and tyrannical power originally written into the bill has been removed, and I am now glad to support the measure, believing it to be a long step in the right direction toward a sound conservation program in this country.

In conclusion, let it be said that I yield to no man in my interest in protecting the migratory waterfowl. I am one of those individuals who want to see the march of wildlife conservation continued, but in carrying it forward I do not subscribe to a tyrannical theory which, in the name of conservation of waterfowl, permits the executive branch of the Government to thrive upon power which rightfully belongs to the States and which was never contemplated by those responsible for the establishment of free and independent government. Under the tenth amendment to the Constitution all the power not specifically granted to the Federal Government is reserved to the States. There is no immediate emergency which justifies the transfer to State sovereignty as was contemplated in the original bill. Certainly every possible vestige of State responsibility should remain in the States.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short paragraph from a letter from the American Train Dispatchers' Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE CONGRESS SHOULD PASS THE ELLENBOGEN H. O. L. C. BILL BEFORE ADJOURNING. IF NOT, A SPECIAL SESSION SHOULD BE CALLED

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, this Congress is still in session. It can and it should stay in session until it passes legislation to relieve the home owners.

HOME-LOAN FORECLOSURES ARE STILL INCREASING

Foreclosures of homes by the H. O. L. C. are still increasing. They have reached a total which must alarm even the most complacent believer of the policies pursued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I am listing below the accumulative total of the foreclosures authorized by the H. O. L. C. together with the amount of money involved:

	Number	Amount
As of Dec. 31, 1935	4,470	$19,689,499
As of Mar. 31, 1936	10,485	46,266,043
As of June 30, 1936	27,651	117,121,222
As of Sept. 30, 1936	51,148	205,035,007
As of Dec. 31, 1936	67,735	270,319,661
As of Mar. 31, 1937	84,385	331,348,872
As of July 31, 1937	105,986	410,679,043

FORECLOSURE OF HOMES DOES NOT HELP THE FINANCES OF THE H. O. L. C.—TO THE CONTRARY IT MEANS INCREASED LOSSES

These foreclosures deprive thousands upon thousands of home owners of their homes, but they do not help the finances of the H. O. L. C. To the contrary, I believe that these foreclosures increase instead of decrease the loss. This is borne out by the fact that as of June 30, 1930, out of 54,085 units of which complete possession had been taken by the H. O. L. C. after foreclosure proceedings, only 29,599 were rented. Thus, about 45 percent of the homes of which the home owners had been dispossessed remained vacant. They not only produce no income for the H. O. L. C. but they have become a constant burden because of the necessary expenditures for taxes, insurance, and maintenance which keep on running.

PASSAGE OF THE ELLENBOGEN BILL WILL SOLVE THIS PROBLEM

The best solution to this problem lies in making the terms of the H. O. L. C. mortgages easier, so that the home owner can pay his obligation and keep his home. By this method home ownership will be preserved and losses to the Government will be avoided.

For this purpose I introduced early at this session H. R. 6092, which reduces the rate of interest on H. O. L. C. mortgages from 5 and 6 percent, now being charged, to 3½ percent and spreads the time for paying the installments of interest and principal over a period of 25 years instead of 10 and 15 years as now provided.

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom this bill was referred, has refused to hold a hearing. I have had similar bills pending in the same committee for about 2 years.

DISCHARGE PETITION NO. 26

To get action on H. R. 6092, I introduced House Resolution 266, which makes H. R. 6092 a special order of business. This resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules. Again no action was forthcoming, in spite of the insistent demand of thousands of home owners all over the country. Therefore, I filed discharge petition no. 26, to discharge the Committee on Rules from further consideration of House Resolution 266.

In spite of the endorsement of my bill by leading newspapers and by thousands of home owners from all over the country, the required 218 Members of the House have not yet signed discharge petition no. 26. It is clear that if the Congress insists on adjourning tomorrow evening the required number of signatures will not be obtained and this bill cannot be passed at this session.

I invite the Members of Congress to make a personal investigation of the number of foreclosures in their own home districts and to consider the remedy which I propose. I want to remind them that I propose to retain home ownership and still prevent loss to the Government.

THE ELLENBOGEN BILL, H. R. 6092, WOULD PRESERVE HOME OWNERSHIP AND PROTECT THE GOVERNMENT'S INVESTMENT

A reduction of the interest rate to 3½ percent, which I propose, would still leave a margin of nearly 1 percent to the H. O. L. C., because it pays on its bonds an average rate of interest of only 2.6 percent. To spread the monthly installment payments over a period of 25 years instead of 15 and 10 years, which is the present practice, would make the payments smaller and easier to bear.

These two changes combined would reduce the monthly payments to home owners from $7.92 for every thousand dollars of his mortgage to $5.01 per month per thousand. The vast majority of home owners whose homes have been foreclosed would have been able to meet these smaller payments. These changes in the law represent a constructive approach to the problem.

I WILL DEMAND A SPECIAL SESSION IN ORDER TO PASS THE ELLENBOGEN H. O. L. C. BILL AT THE EARLIEST POSSIBLE MOMENT

If the Congress adjourns tomorrow without taking action to protect the home owners and prevent further mass foreclosures by the H. O. L. C., I will request the President to call the Congress into a special session in order to legislate for the protection of the home owner, to eliminate unnecessary foreclosures and to preserve the homes of our people.

COTTON

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, the continued decline in the price of cotton is causing consternation in the South.

This is the third time within 2 weeks that I have spoken upon this subject, which means so much to the farmers and the business interests generally of the Southern States.

All of the Members from the Southern States have realized the gravity of the situation, and have cooperated actively and aggressively to stabilize the price.

As stated in my last speech, the Secretary of Agriculture has authority and funds are available with which to stabilize the price under legislation heretofore passed by Congress.

A week ago today it was indicated that the price would be stabilized by a 12-cent guaranty and a 10-cent loan under the plan of 1935, which worked so admirably, both for the Government, for the farmers, and for the Nation at large.

In previous speeches I have pointed out with facts and figures the advantage of the 1935 plan, and on August 13 it was indicated that the price would be stabilized by a 12-cent guaranty and a 10-cent loan, and the press carried this news, and the price of cotton immediately advanced about 20 points.

A week has passed now and nothing definite has been done, but we are assured daily that action will be taken within the next few days.

It is now rumored that instead of making the 10-cent loan, as was first indicated, the loan will be only 9 cents, and that payments to the farmers of the difference between the selling price and the 12-cent guaranty would not be made until a year from now.

A few days ago, when the cotton trade learned that the loan would likely be 9 cents instead of 10 cents, it had a demoralizing effect upon the price of cotton and there was another sharp decline, which has continued daily, and cotton has now reached a price of less than 10 cents a pound, a new low having been reached day before yesterday, and the decline continues. The price today is lower than it has been since December 1933.

The Government should immediately announce definitely, and put into effect its plan as first indicated, of a 10-cent loan and a 12-cent guaranty, and the same method should be used as was done in 1935.

The psychology of the 9-cent loan automatically depresses the price, and this loss will not only affect the farmers and the business world generally, but the Government as well. If the loan is 10 cents it will automatically affect the price upward and the Government will be required to spend less money in paying the farmers the difference between the selling price and the 12-cent guaranty. The farmers this year should be paid as they were in 1935, not a year later, as now threatened.

On yesterday there was presented to President Roosevelt a letter signed by a large number of Representatives in Congress from the Southern States, and under consent granted me I insert same herewith:

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States,
The White House, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned Members of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-fifth Congress, in the interest of the cotton farmers and general recovery, urge—

First. That the cotton loan be 10 cents per pound, and not 9 cents per pound.

Second. That any difference due the farmers on the 12 cents per pound guaranty be paid the farmers this year, and not next year.

Payment this year will enable the cotton farmers and sharecroppers to pay their debts and taxes. It will enable the cotton farmers to employ and pay higher wages to the cotton pickers and workers. It will reduce the cost of relief in the South. This additional purchasing power now will aid general business and national recovery.

This is not a complete list of the southern Members. Many others would have signed if opportunity had been offered, but it was hastily circulated, and a number did not have opportunity to sign same before it was sent to the President. An identical letter signed by 20 Senators was presented to the President yesterday.

Many telegrams are being received by me and other southern Members, and under leave granted to extend my remarks I insert herein two telegrams which are typical of many others received by me and other southern Congressmen, and which express conditions now prevailing in the South.

CORSICANA, TEX., August 19, 1937.

LUTHER A. JOHNSON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Will you urge by all means loan of 10 cents on cotton as farmers' credit will be seriously affected now and next spring if loan is for less; also, business will suffer very much? We all appreciate your efforts in aiding agriculture.

B. L. SANDERS.

NORMANGEE, TEX., August 20, 1937.

LUTHER A. JOHNSON,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Why cotton loans delayed? Market breaking every day. Cotton farmers in distress.

O. YOUNGBLOOD.

I again appeal to and implore our great President and our able Secretary of Agriculture to exercise the authority which they have under the law and at once grant a 10-cent loan and a 12-cent guarantee, using the same effective means and method used in 1935. This will mean the salvation of the South and insure a fair price for this year's crop. The South is just beginning to recover from the awful effects of the depression and all advantage heretofore gained will be lost if the farmers are forced to sell this year's crop at the ridiculously low prices now prevailing, and at the still lower prices which will follow if action is not taken immediately.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including several telegrams received concerning the situation in the South.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a moment or two to make inquiry of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Will the gentleman from Texas, the majority leader, kindly tell us what the program is for today.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, of course there is a conference report about to be called up by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] on the sugar matter. The next recognition will be the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] to move to concur in the Senate amendments to the so-called loophole-tax bill. Next, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] will be recognized to move to concur in the Senate amendment to the so-called Panama Canal toll bill. The next in order, as I understand it at this time, are two rules from the Committee on Rules, perhaps three. I understand the gentleman from New York intends to call up the rule on the Hawaiian matter.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That will not come up until tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then there will be two. One of them is the so-called reindeer bill, and then there is the helium bill,

If conference reports come in after that, they will be acted upon.

Further, I think the Speaker expects to have the House recess late this afternoon and have an evening session for the consideration of the Private Calendar. There are about 93 bills on that calendar in which a great many people are interested.

Mr. COLLINS. Are we to take up the Private Calendar this afternoon or tonight?

Mr. RAYBURN. This evening, after the dinner hour.

Mr. JONES. Will I have an opportunity to call up Senate Joint Resolution 207, the farm bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has a Senate resolution with reference to the feeling of Congress about enacting farm legislation at the earliest date possible. In the event conference reports come in, and I understand one has just come in, they will be entirely in the hands of the Speaker. But that is the program as far as I know it.

Mr. SNELL. There is nothing in the offing at present that is going to interfere with adjournment tomorrow, is there?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not that I can conceive of.

SUGAR BILL OF 1937

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic-sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the conference report upon the sugar bill of 1937 and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to make a point of order against the conference report. I have no objection to the statement being read in lieu of the report, but I do not want to lose the opportunity to make the point of order to the report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time I move to suspend the rules and adopt the conference report on the bill H. R. 7667, the sugar bill of 1937.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to suspend the rules and adopt the conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign ocuntries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, and 6; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "and in order that the regulation of commerce provided for under this Act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary may make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available under this Act shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole, and the amounts of such additional allowances shall be such that in no event will the amount of the total supply be less than the quantity of sugar required to give consumers of sugar in the continental United States a per capita consumption equal to that of the average of the two year period 1935–1936"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 207. (a) Not more than twenty-nine thousand six hundred and sixteen short tons, raw value, of the quota for Hawaii for each of the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939 may be filled by direct-consumption sugar; and not more than four thousand nine hundred and thirty-six short tons, raw value, of the quota for Hawaii for the calendar year 1940 may be filled, during the first two months of such year, by direct-consumption sugar.

"(b) Not more than one hundred and twenty-six thousand and thirty-three short tons, raw value, of the quota for Puerto Rico for each of the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939 may be filled by direct-consumption sugar; and not more than twenty-one thousand and six short tons, raw value, of the quota for Puerto Rico for the calendar year 1940 may be filled, during the first two months of such year, by direct-consumption sugar.

"(c) None of the quota for the Virgin Islands for any calendar year may be filled by direct consumption sugar.

"(d) Not more than eighty thousand two hundred and fourteen short tons, raw value, of the quota for the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

"(e) Not more than three hundred and seventy-five thousand short tons, raw value, of the quota for Cuba for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

"(f) This section shall not apply with respect to the quotas established under section 203 for marketing for local consumption in Hawaii and Puerto Rico."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendments nos. 1 and 3: Under the House bill (sec. 207) direct-consumption sugar quotas for the various areas specified below (which represented the amount of direct-consumption sugar which could be brought from such areas into continental United States in any calendar year) were fixed as follows:

	Short tons, raw value
Hawaii	29,616
Puerto Rico	126,033
Virgin Islands	0
Cuba	375,000

Senate amendment no. 3 provides the same direct-consumption quotas for the Philippine Islands and for Cuba as in the House bill. The remainder of the amount of direct-consumption sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers, as determined by the Secretary under section 201 is, under this Senate amendment, allocated by the Secretary to the following areas on the following basis for each calendar year:

Area:	Percent
Hawaii	0.4756
Mainland	97.5004

Senate amendment no. 1 makes the necessary technical amendment to section 201 of the bill to give the Secretary the power to make the determinations of the amount of direct-consumption sugar which furnishes the figure upon which the percentages set forth in section 207 are based.

The conference agreement adopts the provision of the House bill except that the restrictions on direct-consumption sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico are made applicable to the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939 and the first 2 months of 1940. During the first 2 months of 1940 the amount of direct-consumption sugar which may be brought in from Hawaii is limited to 4,936 short tons and from Puerto Rico to 21,006 short tons. This amount is one-sixth of the direct-consumption quotas for the previous years. During the remainder of the year 1940 the amounts of direct-consumption sugar which may be brought in from Hawaii and Puerto Rico are not restricted. The Senate recedes on amendment no. 1.

On amendment no. 2: Under the House bill (sec. 201) the Secretary was required, in order that the regulation of commerce provided for under the bill should not result in excessive prices to consumers, to make such additional allowances as he deems necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available in the bill should not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to make the production of sugar beets and sugarcane as profitable on the average, per dollar of gross income, as the production of the five principal (measured on the basis of acreage) agricultural cash crops in the United States. Senate amendment no. 2 strikes this standard out and substitutes therefor a provision under which the Secretary, in the regulation of commerce provided for in the bill, may make such additional allowances as he deems necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available shall not result in excessive prices to consumers. The substitute provision also provides that in carrying out such purpose and in making any determination or adjustment, the Secretary shall not cause the price of sugar to be so reduced that the percentage representing the relation between the index of the price of sugar and the index of the average price of all domestic foods will become less than the percentage representing the index relation existing in the period 1932–34, according to Bureau of Labor Statistics. A further limitation provides that the determination of consumption and the total quota supply made available to consumers shall not be less than the quantity of sugar required to give consumers of sugar in the continental United States a per-capita consumption equal to that of the 5-year period 1927–34, inclusive.

The conference agreement provides that in order that the regulation of commerce shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary may make such additional allowances as he deems necessary in the amount determined to be needed to meet consumer requirements, so that the supply made available under the bill will not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole, and the amount of the additional allowances shall be such that in no event will the total supply be less than the quantity required to give consumers a per-capita consumption equal to the 2-year average of 1935 and 1936.

On amendments nos. 4, 5, and 6: Amendment no. 4 strikes from the House bill the provision under which, for the purposes of the tax, sugar in liquid form which is to be used in the distillation of alcohol is considered manufactured sugar. Amendment no. 6 requires a refund of tax paid on manufactured sugar or any article manufactured therefrom which is used for the distillation of alcohol. Amendment no. 5 makes a necessary clerical change in a section heading. The House recedes on all these amendments.

MARVIN JONES,
WALL DOXEY,
J. R. MITCHELL,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, as I stated, I don't want to waive any rights that I have to make a point of order on the conference report.

Mr. JONES. If the House agrees to suspend the rules, that suspends all rules and does away with points or order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Am I to understand that if the rules are suspended the point of order will not lie to the conference report?

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules, if agreed to, suspends all rules. It must be adopted by a two-thirds vote. That would include a point of order against the conference report.

Mr. CALDWELL. Then, Mr. Speaker, if this report actually exceeds the authority of the conferees by including matters neither in the House nor the Senate bill, am I given to understand that the suspending of the rules will prevent the making of a point of order on that account?

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules, if adopted by a two-thirds vote, waives the right of any Member to make a point of order against the conference report. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] will be entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, there were only about three points of difference between the House and Senate bills. One referred to the so-called Lucas amendment, having to do with blackstrap molasses. That amendment was eliminated in conference. The second had to do with the consumer provision. That was modified to an in-between, a little more specific proposition, but carried largely the support or objects of both the Senate and House provisions, which stipulated the consumer provision in the bill.

The third and most important difference was on portions of section 207, which had to do with the restrictions on refined sugar that may be brought in during the life of the bill, from Puerto Rico and Hawaii, within their respective quotas. Their respective total quotas were not affected, but the amount of refined sugar within those quotas was a vital point at issue.

Most of you, I am sure, are familiar with the situation that arose; that is, the question of whether or not the bill should place any restrictions upon refined sugar coming in from Hawaii and Puerto Rico, in light of the fact that they are both under the American flag. It was contended that there was a matter of principle involved in that question. The conference group agreed to accept the House provision with a limitation. That is, sections (a) and (b) of section 207 limited the amount of refined sugar that might be brought in during the life of the bill in any one year, to the highest amount that was brought in from any of those islands in any year prior to the enactment of the original act. The Senate struck out the entire section, including those provisions. The conference group agreed to take the House provisions with this qualification, that these limitations should apply until March 1, 1940, after which all restrictions are taken off of refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico during the remaining time of the operation of the bill, which is until December 31, 1940. In other words, for the last 10 months of operations of the bill, as agreed in conference, there will be no limitation on the amount of the refined sugar that may be brought in from Hawaii and Puerto Rico, within their respective total quotas. We had a very difficult subject to work out and did the best we could. I believe that is all I care to submit on the conference report, unless there are some questions.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that the quotas allowed in the bill is all the sugar they can refine with their present refining equipment in those islands?

Mr. JONES. I am not sure I understood the gentleman.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Those islands cannot refine any more sugar.

Mr. JONES. There is a difference of opinion about that. Of course, I assume that additional facilities could be established, though they were not established even before there were restrictions. However, the question at issue was the principle of equal treatment among all people under the flag. That is, they did not like to have a statement put in the law that forbade them the privilege of manufacturing any part of the sugar which they produce in refined form, and that constituted the issue.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Is the provision in the conference report with reference to that particular subject matter the same as it was when the President wrote his recent letter to Senator HARRISON?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. PETTENGILL. In what respect has it been changed?

Mr. JONES. Of course, the entire Senate amendment about which the President wrote his letter is eliminated. We took the House provision. However, it is in substantially the condition it was when the President made clear his position, except that we establish, effective March 1, 1940, the principle for which he contends. We gave them 2 years and 2 months within which to adjust themselves, and then we establish the principle for which he was contending.

Whether that is satisfactory I cannot say. I was able to clear and would have assurance that it would be all right for the restrictions to run 1 year. That is, the balance of this year and the year 1938; but the question of whether permitting them to run an additional year and 2 months before finally establishing the principle that there would be no restriction is acceptable, I frankly am not able to give the gentleman the answer to that.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. As a matter of fact, the conference report provides that during this period leading up to the time when these two units of this great country will be permitted to increase their production of refined sugar, in the case of Hawaii they will be permitted to produce just as much refined sugar any year as they have ever produced?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I think that is a correct statement.

Mr. JONES. That is a correct statement. The only limitation will be through access to the American mainland market.

Mr. WOODRUFF. But they are given access to the American mainland market for as much of their refined sugar as they have ever brought here.

Mr. JONES. That is a correct statement.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And in the case of Puerto Rico I think there has been only 1 year when that island has produced more refined sugar than she will be permitted to market under this conference agreement. That was some years ago. At no time since has she exceeded the amount of refined sugar that she will be permitted to ship in under this bill.

Mr. JONES. For that reason it seemed to me that it would have very little effect on the sugar situation if we took off all restriction on Hawaiia and Puerto Rico at the end of 1938, and therefore it appeared wise to do that in order to have assurance of a bill. I wanted to take off all the restrictions at the end of 1938. I think it was a mistake not to, because that would have assured a bill. But this was the best we could do and we will just have to take whatever chance there is, but it does finally establish the principle on March 1, 1940, and I hope the conference report may be approved.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one further observation?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I wish to say to the Members that restriction on the production of sugar in continental United States, and particularly in the area in which I live is most irksome to us; and I realize that it is irksome to the other producers outside of continental United States. Nevertheless I think this conference agreement applies equally to all parts of the United States whether continental or offshore; all parts are treated exactly alike; and I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I am well pleased with the action of the House conferees in this connection, and I hope that the conference report will be unanimously agreed to. If it is not agreed to, and if there should be no bill, the great beet-sugar industry, because of the reduction of the tariff on Cuban sugar effected by the President of the United States, will pass out of existence, and as a result our people will pay more for their sugar and the Government will find it necessary to expand its crop-reduction program.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman for his observation. I may say in reference to a restriction of production in our own mainland that I thoroughly agree with his observation. If sugar on the mainland were completely on its own I would say we should not have any control of production or marketing—we do not control production, we control marketing—if there were no artificial stimulus, but sugar has the benefit of the tariff and it has the advantage of the quota and the benefit of the payment system. When you artificially stimulate production, of course, in all fairness you must have some sort of control or the first thing you know you will wake up to find a hothouse plant grown beyond all proportions.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. I realize the difficult task the chairman has had on this bill. The conference report seems to be eminently satisfactory to all parties and gives protection to the labor in my district in New Jersey and other refining districts. I hope the conference report will be adopted.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman tell us what happened to the so-called Lucas amendment covering blackstrap molasses?

Mr. JONES. We had that under discussion but the conferees reached the conclusion, as presented by the other side of the conference group, that probably the price of corn would have to get so slow as to be very unreasonable before it would be affected, and they felt that consideration of that point should be had under different circumstances and under conditions that would permit some effective legislation. They felt that it should properly go into another type of bill. They were, however, interested in the subject.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I realize that the gentleman has had difficulty in reaching a compromise or any agreement; nevertheless I am still firmly of the opinion that that amendment would have been helpful to the corn farmers of the Middle West.

Mr. JONES. I appreciate the gentleman's position.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. The conference report actually exceeds the action of either House.

Mr. JONES. I do not think so, I disagree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. COLMER. Does the gentleman take the position that the March 1 restriction was sufficiently covered by the House bill or the Senate bill?

Mr. JONES. I certainly do. The House provision, 207, ran for the full life of the bill. The Senate struck it out entirely, so the entire time was within the range of the conference group. While they restored a part of it in subsection (a), and that we could not have modified; the part that was included in subsection (b) of the Senate bill was entirely different from (a) and (b) of the House bill.

Mr. GREEN. After that was stricken out it was no longer a part of the House bill.

Mr. JONES. Exactly; therefore, we could have restored the House provision and could have made it operative for only 3 days but still have been within our rights.

Mr. GREEN. I cannot understand how, within the provisions of either bill, that great latitude obtained.

Mr. JONES. That provision was not in the Senate bill at all. We could, therefore, the Senate having none at all and we having a provision lasting 3 years, restore it and the Senate could agree to it with any alternative they wanted, so long as it did not run for a longer time than that set out in the House bill.

Mr. GREEN. We should have let them vote on it.

Mr. JONES. I understand that four or five gentlemen intended to argue about it. As the plan is to adjourn tomorrow night I make this motion in order that the question may be waived by the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not intend to raise the issue or enter into the colloquy between the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Florida, but I am not prepared to concede the point of the gentleman from Texas, because the time limit relates to allocation and not to quotas.

Mr. JONES. I hope the gentleman will not enter into a long discussion of this matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not my purpose. I simply wanted to say that as one who took a slight interest in this battle I realize that the gentleman from Texas and his conferees have had a very difficult problem and have handled it in as eminently fair and practical a manner as they could under the circumstances.

While I would like to have seen the full period of time applied to the refineries, nevertheless, as one who took a slight part at least in the debates on this matter up to the present time, I join with the gentleman in the conference report he has submitted to the House.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to know whether the law as now written makes it certain that Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands at the end of 1940 will have the same rights as other people in the United States?

Mr. JONES. Hawaii and Puerto Rico will have the full right to send their sugar into this country in refined form after March 1, 1940.

Mr. KELLER. Do I understand the Virgin Islands are cut off?

Mr. JONES. Unfortunately, the Virgin Islands were not included in the Senate bill. They were forbidden to bring it in under the House bill; therefore, we could not include them. They, however, send in no sugar in refined form, so that is an academic question.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. As one who is very much interested in sugar legislation, may I say I realize the difficult task that confronted these conferees. I want to express my appreciation to them for the eminently satisfactory conclusion they have come to with respect to this bill. I hope the conference report will be adopted and the bill finally signed, which will safeguard the domestic-sugar industry in this country, a very important industry. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. May I make the same comment that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE] just made?

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, in order to cooperate with the officials of the House I have swallowed my own convictions so many times it is getting to be a habit. The reason I cannot do so in this instance is because I believe a fundamentally vicious principle is involved in this bill. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] mentioned a moment ago, it will not affect the manufacturing interests materially in these possessions now, but, Mr. Speaker, the next thing we are going to have is a bill before the House to either prohibit or put a prohibitive quota on the manufacturers of rum in these islands in competition with our own distilleries, and from then on we are going to have quotas put on these possessions whenever they attempt to develop themselves industrially and interfere with our own industries.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I cannot yield now.

Mr. Speaker, if we do not want these possessions, let us turn them loose, but let us not revert back 150 years in history to the period of colonial exploitation just for political expedience. I would rather have no bill at all than this bill with its vicious, iniquitous, and unjust industrial quota. Some people says it is perfectly fair and all right. The industrial quota in our Territories will be fair and all right when we put it on in the other States and at the same time apply it to our possessions, but when we put it on our possessions and do not apply it to the States, anybody who is willing to acknowledge the facts, it seems to me, must concede that is not fair. It is not American. It is not right and is a precedent, Mr. Speaker, that is going to come back at a future time and we will regret this day.

It will only take one-third of the votes of the Members of this House to defeat this conference report and I appeal to the Members of the House who are interested in preserving our American system of colonial Government to vote against this conference report.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, it has so often been said that legislation is a matter of compromise. I think today we face that issue perhaps as not before in this session. I do not know anything that would go more against the President's wishes in this situation than the failure of a sugar bill; in other words, not have any legislation at all. That would drive control of the entire situation directly into the hands of the so-called Sugar Refining Trust or industry and that is one thing it seems to me the President has been trying to avoid.

We are right near the close of the session. What we do must be done quickly. The floor leader on the Democratic side stated that undoubtedly we will adjourn some time tomorrow. The conferees have had, in my opinion, undue patience. They have brought this conference report back to us and it seems to me it is either accept this proposition or not have a sugar bill at this session of the Congress. Of course, this does not guarantee a bill, but it goes about as far as we can go in the limited time through action of the Senate, the House and the conferees.

So far as I am concerned on the question of sugar, I do not want this Congress to adjourn without a sugar bill being enacted and I hope the President will see that if he vetoes the bill it puts the whole situation in the hands of the seacoast refineries because, as I have stated before, it is immaterial to them whether there is a sugar bill or not except in the absence of any sugar legislation, it is all to their advantage. Apparently that is what the President wants to avoid.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. This legislation, as I see it, is emergency legislation?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Entirely so.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. It is legislation to right a wrong. The wrong was committed when the present administration cut the duty on Cuban sugar to 90 cents. Unless this legislation is passed, when the quotas expire in December, this country will be flooded with cheap Cuban sugar which will be put upon the market with a duty of 90 cents. It will drive all of our domestic producers, including those in our possessions, out of business.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In addition, if this bill is vetoed by the President, your sugar market will begin to break immediately in anticipation of what will happen subsequent to January 1, 1938. I do not know anything that could be done which would more nearly destroy the domestic production of sugar than for this bill to fail of passage at this time.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, because I appreciate his observations.

Mr. HARLAN. If this conference report is defeated in the House the bill can then go back to the Senate for another conference and we can yet bring out a sugar bill. The defeat of the conference report does not necessarily mean the defeat of the whole sugar bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. How fast must we work, then, in order to attempt to override a veto, in the event this bill is vetoed sometime tomorrow, if we adjourn tomorrow night?

Mr. HARLAN. You have a better chance of getting this bill vetoed if you keep this industrial quota in it than if you strike it out. You can have a sugar bill. If we defeat this conference report we can send it back to the Senate and still get a sugar bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Of course, that is a matter of opinion, because none of us knows what the President will do.

Mr. HARLAN. Of course, I am not speaking for the President, myself. I am hoping this House will take its own responsibility on its own shoulders and not push it over on the shoulders of the President.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There has been a great deal of compromise in this bill. Take the situation with reference to the refining restriction disappearing on March 1, 1940. It will take the islands probably a year to get the refining equipment set up. Every Member of this House knows I am very friendly to Puetro Rico and Hawaii, for this has been clearly evidenced, but I hope the Members of the House will see their way clear to compromise somewhat and go along with this situation to the end that we shall not have to repeat next January another sugar fight running over several months.

Mr. HARLAN. Could I impose on the gentleman to yield again?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARLAN. The gentleman does not think for a minute that capital will invest in any refining business in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Virgin Islands with this provision pending in the bill, because anyone knows that before the period of the quota expires there will be another bill before this House, backed by the American Sugar Refining Co. and assisted by the beet-sugar bloc, to continue the quota indefinitely.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. (After counting.) One hundred and fifty-five Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 150]

Allen, Del.	Douglas	Kniffin	Sirovich

Culkin	Kleberg	Scrugham

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. JONES, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, the merits and demerits of this sugar legislation have already been discussed fully on the floor, and I shall not go over the same ground. However, I do want to point out what has happened since the bill was passed by the House and was referred to the other body.

In the Senate committee report this statement was made in reference to the committee's amendment of section 207, which was accepted by the Senate:

> This amendment is intended to meet the difficulty arising out of the discrimination involved in establishing restrictions on receipts of direct-consumption sugars from the domestic areas of Puerto Rico and Hawaii without corresponding restrictions on the mainland.

The amendment then placed quotas on all direct-consumption sugar on a percentage basis, after having admitted that the direct limitations on a tonnage basis embodied in the bill as it passed the House were a discrimination against two domestic areas, two other parts of the United States, Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

I have no doubt the conferees have brought back the very best measure they could possibly get in the discussion between the two Houses, but it is true that the reamendment of section 207 proposed in the conference report places the limitations on Hawaii and Puerto Rico back again on a tonnage basis and attempts to provide a compromise by stating that these limitations will expire automatically before the bill expires. However, you will note that the time of expiration is only 8 months before the bill expires. The limitation is for 2 years and 2 months, and was carefully drawn for that purpose. They would not accept the compromise of the restrictions expiring in 1 year or a year and a half or 2 years, but they made it 2 years and 2 months.

I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the purpose of the establishment of this particular limitation, and I am referring to the RECORD of August 19, page 9341.

> I want in that connection to say, while I signed the conference report, as did others of the conferees, which makes a differential as to the time the bill shall operate on direct-consumption sugar imported into the United States as contrasted with raw sugars coming into the United States, that it is not because in the future I shall be for leaving the gates wide open and letting refined sugar come in from Puerto Rico or from Hawaii. We fixed the date March 1, 1940, in the hope that when the Congress meets in 1940 it will at least have 2 months during the session of Congress, which will begin in January, to pass legislation that will take care of this situation.

In other words, the limitation of 2 years and 2 months on the restrictions is designed so there may be enacted in January and February of 1940 a continuation of the restrictions enacted by this Congress.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that this measure as amended is no better than the original section 207 in the bill (H. R. 7667). The restrictions on direct-consumption sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico remain in full force and effect, and it is intended that they shall be reenacted into law in the early part of 1940.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, if I had a vote I would vote against the conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I want to speak for just 2 minutes on the quota theory. Some Members have objected to the bill because it provides for a quota. Last spring all the sugar producers of the world met in London and signed a quota agreement. They appreciated the fact that the world was producing, and could produce, more sugar than we could consume and that a failure to provide for a quota system meant the ruination of the entire industry.

In 1933 all the growers of sugar in the United States who were interested met here in Washington and they all agreed to a quota system. The beet-sugar people that year produced 1,770,000 tons and they agreed to a quota of 1,550,000 tons. The processors of beets submit to a quota, insofar as refining is concerned, when the beet growers agree to a quota on acreage.

The cotton people of the South are before the Committee on Agriculture, of which I am a member, and have asked the President to make loans on cotton and they have promised next year to submit to a quota on cotton. The corn people of the North want loans on corn and they have come to the Committee on Agriculture and have said to the President if he will make loans on corn this year to keep it from selling at a price that will ruin them, next year they will submit to a quota on corn.

The sugar people are trying to do what every sensible man does and what every sensible manufacturer does. When a manufacturer finds he is producing more goods than the country can consume, he reduces his production.

We are not restricting the refining of sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico, but simply retaining it at the point it was when all producers of sugar submitted to a quota. They can refine, under this bill, as much sugar as they ever refined.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is very unfair to my State. The State of Florida would be infinitely better off if we had no sugar legislation rather than to accept this sugar bill. The same is true of every sugar-consuming State in this Union. It is false economy to limit the production of any farm commodity in America where we produce only 25 percent of America's consumption.

I appreciate the position of my good friend, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], but corn, wheat, and cotton are exported. We produce more of these products than we consume in America and therefore the same rule does not apply to sugar. We should have unrestricted sugar production in America. This policy of restriction of sugar production cannot and will not endure. I protest any such unfair, unwise legislation. It is false economy and contrary to the best interest of our Nation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA].

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the conference report on bill H. R. 7667 for the reason that the discriminations against American citizens who reside in Puerto Rico, which I complained of during the House debate, have not been removed.

At the time that a conference was requested by the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I objected because I felt that the discriminations against Puerto Rico would not be removed in conference, and that the bill with its limitations and restrictions against Puerto Rico and its citizens should not be enacted into law.

The conferees have brought back to the House for its approval a bill which contains practically the same restrictions and limitations as the bill which we passed originally.

The change in the time limit on the restrictions as to the amount of refined sugar that Puerto Rico can send to the United States, from 3 years as in the original bill to 2 years and 2 months is merely a subterfuge and does not in any way recognize the principle of equal rights, privileges, and immunities for all American citizens, irrespective of where they reside.

If this change in the time limit when the people of Puerto Rico may engage freely in the shipment of refined sugar is intended to pacify them for the abrogation of their rights as American citizens, then let me say to the Members of this House that the American citizens who reside in that island do not intend to barter their rights as American citizens for the material advantages which they gain by this change.

Mr. Speaker, I again repeat that I shall vote against the conference report for the reasons above stated and I trust that the membership of this House will join me in opposing the setting of such a dangerous precedent as is contained in this sugar bill.

The Congress of the United States must not discriminate against the American citizens who reside in Puerto Rico.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I hope this conference report will be adopted, and that this bill will become a law. It is true that there is possibly no single interest involved in the sugar industry—and there are a great many different and conflicting interests—which is entirely satisfied. In the very nature of things it was impossible to reconcile and satisfy all of the various interests. I do not believe that during the time I have been a Member of Congress I have known of any measure in the consideration of which I participated either in committee or in the House, which involved as much difficulty as this sugar question. I believe the conferees have gotten together on as fair a basis as can be had. It is a matter of great importance to the domestic sugar industry in this country that the bill become a law at this time. It is also a matter of interest I think to the consumers of sugar in this country, because this bill is drawn not only in the interest of the producer, but it has definite provisions in it for the benefit and protection of the consumer.

I shall not enter into a discussion of the questions that were involved and considered by the conferees. The chairman of the committee has already very ably pointed out those differences and how they were reconciled.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. We were told when this bill was before the House for consideration that the President would veto it if the quota restrictions were left in it. The bill now comes back with a 3-year restriction. Is it not about the best bill that we can get in this session of Congress, and unless we adopt the conference report we may not have any sugar bill at all.

Mr. HOPE. I am strongly of the opinion that if we do not adopt this conference report we are going to end the session of Congress without any sugar legislation.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. In view of the President's statement, does not the gentleman think this bill will be vetoed?

Mr. HOPE. I have no opinion as to what may be in the President's mind with regard to this legislation. This bill meets at least in part the objections the President had voiced in connection with sugar legislation.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does not the gentleman think that practically the same discriminations which we complained of in the House bill are now in the present bill that the conferees have agreed to?

Mr. HOPE. No. I think there is recognition in this bill of the principle for which the gentleman has been contending. It is true that it is deferred, but still it is a recognition of the principle. The gentleman knows my position in the matter. He knows that I am in accord with his views on that particular question, and I say to him that I think this is the best possible bill that can be gotten at this time. I further think that this legislation is a matter of such great importance to the sugar industry in Puerto Rico, in Hawaii, and continental United States that all of us should support this conference report.

I do not want to let this occasion pass, Mr. Speaker, without saying that all of those who are interested in sugar legislation owe a deep debt of gratitude to the able and distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], for the work that he has done during the several months this measure has been under consideration in Congress. I am sure it is the judgment of everyone who has followed this legislation closely that had it not been for the untiring efforts of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture we would not have had a sugar bill at this session of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. It looks now as if we were not going to have any labor bill or any farm bill at this session of Congress. Would it not be better to defer this bill until the next session of Congress? I have not any refinery in my district, I have no beets, I have no cane, I have nothing but consumers and, if this bill becomes a law, naturally it will increase the price of sugar to some of the constituents in my district.

Mr. HOPE. I disagree with the gentleman. I do not think it will increase the price of sugar to the consumer. The Jones-Costigan Act did not increase prices to the consumer, and the present bill contains even stronger provisions for consumer protection.

Mr. HOUSTON. It appears to me with all this controversy it would be better to go over until the next session, when we would get a more satisfactory bill.

Mr. HOPE. We would not get any better bill in the next session than we are getting right now, and in the meantime the domestic sugar industry in this country will suffer materially if we do not pass a bill at this time.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman mean the sugar trust?

Mr. HOPE. I mean the farmers who produce sugar beets and sugarcane.

In view of the thorough consideration which this legislation has received during the last several months it hardly seems necessary to go into any further discussion of its purposes and effects at this time. However, I think it might be helpful for me to conclude my remarks by pointing out what I believe is generally agreed to be the purpose and intent of Congress in passing this legislation.

First. That through administration of quotas sugar prices may be anticipated which will be fair to producers, consumers, and processors, and at the same time maintain the domestic sugar industry.

Second. That all producers shall receive adjustment payments on their 1937 crop and that all producers in subsequent years who comply with reasonable and sensible farm practices shall receive adjustment payments and that through these adjustment payments which are to go to all sugar producers of the United States, the act is expected to restore and maintain the purchasing power of sugar farmers and laborers sufficient to enable them to maintain a decent, American standard of living.

Third. That Congress does not anticipate or intend that a burdensome regimentation of either producers, laborers, or processors should be brought about through the administration of this act, but that the act should be administered as liberally as its terms will permit.

Fourth. That it is the definite intention that the sugar program shall be kept and administered separately from any other regulatory agricultural program, because the production of sugar is inherently different from other agricultural crops.

Fifth. That while the Agricultural Conservation Act is a beneficial and worthy piece of national legislation, the Sugar Act of 1937 in its terms and in its proper administration should be divorced from the agricultural-conservation program except as to regulations mentioned above, and the payments made under this act should have no bearing on or connection with the payments made under the agricultural-conservation program to sugar-producing farmers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. All time has expired. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the conference report agreed to?

The question was taken.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands the yeas and nays. As many as favor taking the vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twelve Members have risen, not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are refused. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA] demands a division.

The House divided and there were—ayes 198, noes 23.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8234) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, prevent tax evasion and avoidance, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 3, line 17, after royalties", insert "other than mineral oil, or gas royalties."

"(h) Mineral, oil or gas royalties: Mineral, oil, or gas royalties, unless (1) constituting 50 percent or more of the gross income, and (2) the deductions allowable under section 23 (a) (relating to expenses) other than compensation for personal services rendered by shareholders, constitute 15 percent or more of the gross income."

Page 9, strike out lines 1 to 4, inclusive, and insert:

"(b) Amounts used or irrevocably set aside to pay or to retire indebtedness of any kind incurred prior to January 1, 1934, if such amounts are reasonable with reference to the size and terms of such indebtedness."

Page 42, strike out lines 1 to 9, inclusive, and insert:

"(a) Credits of estate or trust—

"(1) For the purpose of the normal tax and the surtax an estate or trust shall be allowed the same personal exemption as is allowed to a single person under section 25 (b) (1), except that no exemption shall be allowed a trust if the trust instrument requires or permits the accumulation of any portion of the income of the trust and there is not distributed an amount equal to the net income. For the purposes of this paragraph the term 'net income' does not include amounts included in gross income which, under the law of the jurisdiction under which the trust is administered, cannot (even if permitted or required by the trust instrument to be considered as income) be considered as income and are not distributable.

"(2) If no part of the income of the estate or trust is included in computing the net income of any legatee, heir, or beneficiary, then the estate or trust shall be allowed the same credits against net income for interest as are allowed by section 25 (a)."

Page 43, strike out lines 7 to 21, inclusive, and insert:

"(4) (A) Every estate, and every trust entitled to the personal exemption allowed by section 163 (a) (1), the net income of which for the taxable year is $1,000 or over.

"(B) Every trust, not entitled to a personal exemption under section 163 (a) (1), which has a net income for the taxable year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON AIRPORT

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following request from the Senate of the United States:

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
August 20, 1937.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the message of the Senate of August 16 requesting the House to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 7985) to promote air commerce by providing for the enlargement of Washington Airport, together with Senate engrossed amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate request will be granted.

There was no objection.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is proper at this time to make an announcement for the information of all Members who may be interested.

It is presumed that we will work rather late in the afternoon today, and then the majority leader will make a motion to recess until 7:30 or 8 o'clock tonight. The Speaker has heretofore been given authority to set down an hour for the calling of individual bills on the Private Calendar. At the hour indicated in the motion to recess the Members are notified that the Private Calendar will be called tonight.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, may I say the majority leader has in mind asking unanimous consent that after consideration of the Private Calendar tonight, the Consent Calendar may be taken up just as to Senate bills or House bills where there is a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's table. There are a total of 20 such bills on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. SNELL. It is not the intention to start and go through the whole calendar, is it?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, no; just Senate bills or House bills where there is a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York ask unanimous consent that those bills may be in order?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the call of the Private Calendar tonight, it shall be in order to take up on the Consent Calendar, Senate bills and House bills where there is an identical Senate bill on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would that include any bill that is not regularly on the Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Only bills that are regularly on the Consent Calendar, under the conditions named by the gentleman from New York. The Speaker will have the right to recognize Members to call up such bills. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, then no individual who has a bill of his own will be permitted to bring it before the House from now on. Is that the understanding?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has only stated the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. Of course, it only includes those bills that are covered by the request—bills on the Consent Calendar and subject under the rules, to be brought up.

Mr. RICH. They will only be permitted to come up tonight?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5417) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after "tonnage", insert "Provided, That the basic rules of measurement shall not be changed except after public hearing and 6 months' public notice of such change."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE HOUSING BILL

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until midnight to file a conference report and statement on the housing bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE REINDEER INDUSTRY IN ALASKA

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 317.

House Resolution 317

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1722, an act to provide subsistence for the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska by establishing for them a permanent and self-sustaining economy; to encourage and develop native activity in all branches of the reindeer industry; and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Territories, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from New York is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order the consideration of a bill which has for its purpose to take care of the reindeer in Alaska for the natives and to prevent outsiders for commercial or other reasons interfering with the reindeer to the detriment of the natives.

The reindeer is the only animal that can graze anywhere in Alaska. It is absolutely necessary from the Government standpoint to protect them.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, when the United States took over Alaska in 1867, the Eskimos inhabiting the Arctic and the Bering Sea regions of Alaska had a comfortable and sufficient economy. They are a very honest, kindly, simple people—they still are—hospitable, generous, and some of the older ones take not too much thought for the future. With the advent of the white man the usual thing happened. When the white man came in contact with the natives the white man almost destroyed the entire native food supply that had theretofore been enjoyed by the Eskimos of the Arctic, the Bering Sea, and the Aleutian Islands regions. The natives were reduced to absolute destitution and but for the further action of some very charitable and good men, and but for the action of the Government I suppose that we would not have 1,000 Eskimos alive today. But a Presbyterian missionary, Dr. Sheldon Jackson, conceived the idea of bringing reindeer from Siberia to provide the supply of food and clothing for the natives. Between the years 1890 and 1902 about 1,280 reindeer were brought across Bering Sea and landed in Alaska. They have now multiplied until according to the report of the Department of the Interior there are about 600,000 reindeer in northern and western Alaska. These reindeer were brought over principally, primarily, and almost entirely for the benefit of the natives.

With the expansion of the herds the usual thing happened. Again the white man entered in. This time he determined that the reindeer was a resource that ought to belong to the white man. So, regardless of the effect upon the natives the white man acquired deer until they now claim to have perhaps one-third of all the reindeer in Alaska. The herds have become inextricably intermingled until it is difficult for any white man or any native to tell which are his deer. Order has practically disappeared on the reindeer range, and unless some action is taken and taken promptly the Eskimos of Alaska before long will be reduced to the condition that they were in when the reindeer were brought in.

In addition to other things there has been mismanagement and very serious mistakes made in administration. Up until 1925 under the leadership of an excellent administrator and a high-minded self-sacrificing man, William Thomas Lopp, the Eskimos were taught and trained in the herding of reindeer; but along about 1923 when the white men's herds increased, the Government officials were persuaded by the white owners that there was no use herding the reindeer, but that they should be turned out on the range. That was very fine for the white owners, and it was very bad for the natives.

The pending bill proposes to take a few steps backward and to purchase the deer that are owned by others than natives and to give them to the natives to be kept by the natives in perpetuity. The places where reindeer now graze are all in the northern third of Alaska, above the Arctic Circle, in the Seward Peninsula, to which I am pointing now on the map which you see before you, and also in the Kuskokwin region. There are some reindeer in the region adjacent to the shores of the Bering Sea. Reindeer can graze in almost any part of Alaska. There is an erroneous idea, however, that reindeer can live only where the peculiar lichen grows that is called reindeer moss, but this is not true. A reindeer will not eat reindeer moss if he can get anything else to eat; but, fortunately for the grazing in the Arctic regions, food that can be obtained in the northern third of Alaska in the winter is this reindeer moss, which grows about one-eighth to one-quarter of an inch a year.

Mr. Speaker, anyone who has taken the trouble to read this bill and the report upon it will readily grasp just what is sought to be done by the bill. The purpose of the bill is to purchase all of the reindeer of Alaska, now owned by others than natives, and to distribute the deer so purchased among the natives, or that the Government hold the deer in trust for the use and benefit of the natives; and that thereafter the reindeer in Alaska be reserved as to ownership and grazing for the natives alone, so that all others than natives will be excluded from the reindeer business or industry; and that the natives be aided in carrying on their reindeer industry or business in all of its branches so as to make it a complete and self-sustaining business.

We are now seeking to do the thing that should have been done when reindeer were first brought to Alaska. From the very beginning the reindeer should have been reserved for the use or benefit of the natives and no one but natives should ever have been permitted to own or graze a reindeer in the Territory.

We are seeking by this bill to establish a reindeer business in all of its branches, of the natives, for the natives, and also by the natives, except for such assistance which must, in the beginning at least, be given to the natives by the Government through the Secretary of the Interior.

In order to buy the deer and such equipment as may be useful and necessary for carrying on a native reindeer industry it is possible that some part of the purchase price will be paid to persons who are not deserving of any favor or bounty from the Government, but if we wish to buy the reindeer and other appurtenant property owned by white men it is necessary to pay a fair purchase price. I am confident that no more than a fair price will be paid for any property purchased.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is not entirely in the form in which I desire it. I introduced in the House the original reindeer bill, H. R. 5126. In that bill was incorporated my own views as to the kind of a measure that should be enacted. In that bill I provided for a limitation of $3 per head as the average price to be paid for the deer and I further provided that all reindeer purchased must be actually counted in corrals or through chutes or in some other effective manner. These provisions were opposed by the Department upon the ground that compliance with them was impracticable, and in harmony with the views of the Department, those provisions were stricken from the bill.

My bill further provided the time limitation of 1 year for the purchase of the deer and other property, unless the same should be purchased through an exercise of the power of eminent domain. The Department opposed that provision as impracticable and, therefore, that provision was also stricken out of the bill.

The bill which I introduced further contained a detailed plan whereby rules and regulations were to be made and provided that they should first be worked out by the natives themselves, and then submitted to the Secretary of the Interior. This plan is, in my judgment, a sane and sensible one, for the natives themselves know more about reindeer and their grazing and herding and everything else affecting them than any white man, because they have lived with reindeer for many, many years. For the life of me, I am unable to see any objection to that provision. But the Department objected to it, and so that, too, has been stricken out of the original bill.

At the proper time, Mr. Speaker, I intend to offer and to urge an amendment to the bill as it now stands, requiring the Secretary to confer with and consult the natives before making any rules and regulations concerning reindeer or the reindeer range, and I hope that my amendment will be agreed to by the House.

In a letter dated August 13 addressed to the chairman of the Territories Committee, Mr. GREEN, the Acting Secretary of the Interior says in substance that it is the intention of the Department to consult the natives in matters of reindeer management or interest, and that, as under the operation of the Taylor Grazing Act, the first approach to administration will be through conferences with the natives. That letter is so important that I shall ask leave to insert it in the RECORD at this point. It is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 13, 1937.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
Chairman, Committee on Territories,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. GREEN: Further reference is made to my report of May 17 on H. R. 5126, commonly known as the reindeer bill. Section 11 of the bill as written provided that reindeer owners, by districts, should draw up and adopt rules and regulations governing the use of the range and other phases of the reindeer industry. These, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, would have the effect of law.

In commenting upon this section of the bill I stated in part:

"Section 11 as written outlines a most acceptable method for the formulation of the rules and regulations and for the administration of many matters incident to the supervision of the reindeer industry or business. In any case it is one which will be employed as far as possible in the reindeer work of the Department. It is not, however, thought advisable to include such administrative details in a law—details which conceivably should be changed from time to time as experience might dictate. It would seem preferable to reserve these for the rules and regulations."

The Department's report suggested as an amendment:

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as, in his judgment, are necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act."

In connection with the consideration of S. 1722, companion bill to H. R. 5126 now before the House, some fear has been expressed that in proposing this amendment, the way was being prepared for an autocratic rule of Eskimo reindeer affairs. Nothing could have been farther from my intention. I subscribe most heartily to the tone and philosophy of the bill forcibly and concretely expressed in the provision of section 8 which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to transfer the powers conferred upon him to organizations of natives. I know of no legislation more liberal.

As a matter of fairness the Department would expect to consult native owners, associations, or villages in matters of reindeer management or interest and by their aid to develop a reindeer program which would both assure the security of the industry and recognize the experience and equities of the owners. The situation which will face us, should the reindeer bill be enacted, will be similar to those presented by the Taylor Grazing Act, and consultation with owners was the first approach the Department made in considering the problems incident to its administration. I do not know of any reason for abandoning this method when making those adjustments which the enactment of the reindeer legislation would require.

My recommendation for amendment as above stated, therefore, was made not to limit the part which native interests should have in the development and maintenance of a reindeer program, but was made in an effort to provide what I consider to be necessary flexibility in the bill for the organization and management of such a program.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES WEST,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.

It is my intention also, Mr. Speaker, to offer an amendment requiring the Secretary, whenever in his judgment it is practicable and to the best interest of the natives, to appoint natives to supervisory positions in the reindeer industry or business. Surely, no one can have any objection to that, for if this venture is to succeed at all, the natives must be schooled and trained to carry on the business ultimately by themselves and without any but the most general supervision.

The third amendment which I intend to offer, and which I hope will be adopted by the House, is one which will provide that the bill shall not go into effect at all, unless and until at least $1,000,000 of the amount authorized has been appropriated and is available. The purpose of this amendment lies in the fact that the bill now before us necessarily carries an authorization for an appropriation of $2,000,000, but does not make an appropriation of any amount. The bill is valueless unless a substantial appropriation is made and the deer owned by others than natives are purchased.

As I said in the report, unless this is done the bill may as well be thrown out the window. It is entirely frivolous to pass this bill, unless money is appropriated to purchase the non-native-owned deer and also to aid the natives in carrying on their business and in establishing a market for the surplus deer. What I fear is that even after the bill passes the appropriation may not be made and so the last end may be just as bad as the beginning. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I am apprehensive about the power given for the control of the range and for making rules and regulations. If only natives are involved, the rules and regulations must ultimately redound to the benefit of the natives, but if white men own deer we will have the old difficulty which has always existed when white men come into conflict, and when as we know from experience the natives always get the worst of it.

The purposes and objects of this measure are admirable. Those purposes and objects embrace only a permanent and lasting benefit to the natives of Alaska. The purchase of the deer will enable the Government to give plenty of deer to all of the natives in the Territory, who need deer and can use them.

For many years the people of the Aleutian Islands have requested reindeer, and later the natives of Metlakahtla have asked for deer. They can be used profitably in many parts of Alaska where no reindeer exist at present.

The bill, if enacted, is not self-administrative. In order to obtain the contemplated benefits by the bill, it will be necessary to have good administration. During past years we have had good administration at times. I have already mentioned the administration under the supervision of Mr. Lopp, who was removed from office because, in my opinion, he was too active in protecting the rights of the natives. Later we had another superintendent of the reindeer service in Alaska, Mr. Ben B. Mozee, who was equally zealous in looking after the rights of the natives, but he, too, was removed from office in 1931 or 1932.

At the present time I believe that 90 percent, and perhaps more, of the natives of Alaska would like to have Mr. Mozee put in charge of the reindeer service, and I have earnestly requested it. But he has not been reemployed. He should be put on the job tomorrow, for he is one man who is capable of making the administration of the reindeer service, particularly if this bill is enacted, an outstanding success. Mr. Mozee has the confidence of the natives, and he has the confidence, as well, of most of the people who have an intimate knowledge of the reindeer industry. His appointment to a position of high administrative authority under this bill, if it be passed by the House today, would, in my opinion, insure a harmonious and satisfactory as well as efficient administration of the Government's program, and would bring comfort and confidence to every Eskimo in northwestern Alaska.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the Delegate from Alaska.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman inform the House who owns these reindeer, who will get this $2,000,000?

Mr. DIMOND. About two-thirds of the reindeer, and this is only an estimate, are owned now by the natives. The other third are owned by white men, but their herds are scattered in various parts of the Territory.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Who is going to get the money?

Mr. DIMOND. The white men who own the deer are going to get the money if the money is appropriated and the deer are purchased.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Are they residents of Alaska or do they live in the United States?

Mr. DIMOND. Many of them are residents of Alaska. A large number of reindeer are owned by a corporation. I suppose a good many of the stockholders in that corporation reside in the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the name of the corporation.

Mr. DIMOND. It is called the Northwestern Livestock Co.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That company was organized I presume to go into the reindeer business for profit.

Mr. DIMOND. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Probably it has not had very much success?

Mr. DIMOND. In my own opinion it has been a flat failure financially.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Instead of this being a relief measure, it is a proposition to bail out some big corporation that has lost money?

Mr. DIMOND. It is not. If this were a proposition to give money to any white men who had made a bad investment, I would advise every Member of the House to vote against it. As one of the incidents of this bill, unless we want to indulge in some kind of confiscation, to which we have never yet resorted in this country, in order to help the natives it is necessary to purchase these deer that are owned by the white men and distribute them among the natives and forever forbid, through the control of the range, white men from going into the business so that we will never have to go back and do this job all over again.

To pursue the question asked by the gentleman, the Government does not owe a cent to the white men. They have had all the advantages. But the Government does owe something to the natives. This is a scientific, statesmanlike way to help the natives.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. To go a little further, is it not pretty hard to identify the ownership of these animals?

Mr. DIMOND. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How are you going to identify the animals in order to pay for them?

Mr. DIMOND. That is going to be difficult, but it may be estimated perhaps with a fair degree of accuracy. In the bill which I originally drew I had another provision, requiring them all to be put through chutes or corrals and counted, but the Department said it was impossible of compliance, and the committee rejected it. Now we are confronted with the provision whereby the Department, or the judge, if the thing is passed on by the court, will simply have to round up such deer as can be corralled, look at the marks upon them, then determine as best as can be determined who owns the other deer that are not marked.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Do they have brands?

Mr. DIMOND. Oh, yes; they are earmarked. They all ought to be earmarked; but unfortunately, owing to the change of administration that took place along about 1925, there has not been adequate herding in recent years, and on account of the infiltration of the white man's deer with the natives' deer the natives have become discouraged. They do not want to spend their time herding white men's deer. There is only one solution, and this is the solution, in my judgment.

Mr. BURDICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. If these reindeer are needed for the natives, it would not make any difference of whom you bought them as long as the price is right?

Mr. DIMOND. No; it would not make any difference.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a friendly question?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman really believe that we can in the future enact legislation which will prevent a white man from owning and operating a herd of reindeer in Alaska?

Mr. DIMOND. The categorical answer to the question is "yes", because 99.8 percent of all of the land in Alaska, and a little more, perhaps, still belongs to the United States Government, and the Government has full right of control of all the range.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, if this bill passes, the Government can control the range so that the provision of the bill forbidding white men to go back on the range can be lawfully enforced without any infringement of the Constitution.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If this corporation, which I understand was organized for profit, is going through a period of financial failure through its own lack of management and judgment of the factors involved and, being financially washed up, why should we not let that situation continue and let the investors take the loss, as we do here in the United States; and then, if the competition between the white men and Eskimos cannot be continued, the white man has to retire.

Mr. DIMOND. To answer that, the white man does not retire in case of failure of the white man's corporation. Even if this corporation goes bankrupt and its assets are sold, somebody is going to own them. Who is going to own them? Why, another white man unless the Government steps in, and we have the whole thing to do over again. In the meantime, valuable years are lost. This is the time to do it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The Government has been in the Santa Claus business pretty much of late years. Can we not retain a few for our own use?

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. In connection with the purchase of property, whether a company or an individual has lost money or made money does not enter into this picture. Only a reasonable price will be expended by the Department for the purchase of any property that may be purchased by the Government for the natives. In other words, if a man happens to have $25 in a reindeer, counting his loss, and the reindeer is worth only $3, that is all the Government will pay. So there is not any possibility of the Government paying more for the property than it is worth today?

Mr. DIMOND. That is quite right.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. What, in the gentleman's opinion, would happen to this company if the Government does not come forward with some such action as provided by this bill?

Mr. DIMOND. To answer the gentleman, I have not the slightest idea. I do not know the details of their finances. So far as I know, and I think I am correct in this, the operation of the Northwestern Live Stock Co. has not been a financial success.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. In other words, the gentleman is in doubt as to whether the company can continue to operate unless Uncle Sam extends this helping hand at the present time?

Mr. DIMOND. I cannot answer that, but I know somebody will try to continue to operate unless the Government steps in and tries to take care of the natives. As long as somebody tries to operate, we will have the same condition of chaos that exists in northwestern Alaska with respect to the reindeer, and the Eskimos will lose whatever confidence they now have in the Government.

Mr. COLDEN. What is the number of Eskimos who are dependent upon the reindeer for subsistence?

Mr. DIMOND. There are probably 14,000 Eskimos in the northern part of Alaska and down along the Bering Sea. There are about 18,000 Eskimos in all of Alaska. They inhabit the Arctic regions and the Bering Sea regions as well as the Alaska Peninsula regions.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Where are these reindeer going to be marketed after we buy them from their present owners and give them to the natives?

Mr. DIMOND. The surplus must be marketed principally in the United States, but I wish to assure the gentleman that the price at which the reindeer meat can be laid down in the United States will be so high the meat will not come into competition with beef and pork.

May I point out also in this connection that every dollar the Eskimo gets he spends for supplies brought in from the United States. If the Eskimo is able to market some reindeer in the United States he is going to take the money he receives for them and spend it for lard, pork, ham, bacon, clothes, shoes, and other things which he buys from the United States.

This is a digression, but I may say that we recently made an agreement with Russia and had to make sacrifices to get their promise to take $40,000,000 of our exports, yet Alaska buys approximately $35,000,000 worth of goods yearly from the United States, and you do not have to do anything to get this business.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Alaska 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Back of this whole thing is the question of market. This bill would not be here today if the question of market were not involved, because the white owners, the Lowman interests, started a venture which has failed because there is no market. There are too many deer. It is impossible to produce reindeer meat in Alaska and sell it anywhere on earth to compete profitably. If this be true, we are going to give the Lowman interests $2,000,000 to take care of their failure; and when we get through we are going to have these hundreds of thousands of deer—increasing every minute—owned by the Eskimos, with the Eskimos supervised and taken care of by the Government. Therefore, as a matter of fact, the Government is going to go into the reindeer business. I am wondering if the Government will be bringing in this reindeer meat and placing it on the market in this country to compete with the surplus of livestock we already have. Only those who have been up to Alaska and have seen this thing can realize it.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARLAN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he had ever eaten any reindeer meat.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I have eaten it.

The people who started this venture, the Lowman interests, thought the meat would sell. They started on that theory to raise reindeer and sell them as a meat product, but people will not buy the meat. So the Lowman interests have all these reindeer, which are increasing in number, and the venture is a failure. Now they are wanting good, beneficent Uncle Sam to come in and take the burden off their hands and give the deer to the Eskimos; but when the Eskimos get the deer they cannot eat them. They must be marketed by someone. I have been up there and seen these reindeer, and there are literally thousands of them, and they are increasing and increasing and increasing.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, it is a mighty fine thing to be a Santa Claus, but Santa Claus should come only on Christmas Eve. We have been a pretty good Santa Claus to the citizens of Alaska. We have also been a good Santa Claus to the Eskimos of Alaska. When we had the Interior Department appropriation bill up before the House, and when the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] was before the committee, he made a special request to take care of the Eskimos of Alaska. In that appropriation bill we gave $33,500 to the Reindeer Service in Alaska. They requested that we increase the amount this year by $5,000. We made an increase in the Interior Department appropriation bill in order that we might furnish reindeer enough to take care of the Eskimos in Alaska, and I thought we had done so, according to the request of the Department.

Let us see now what this bill actually does. A private corporation had been formed in Alaska. This bill provides for the purchase of cold-storage plants, an abattoir, a system of corrals for these reindeer, and a lot of camps and camping equipment. The bill also provides, and this is in accordance with the statement of a representative of this corporation himself, for the purchase of the corporation in which is included 250,000 reindeer. This is what he told me. I asked what the value of these reindeer is, and he said $3 apiece. Three dollars times 250,000 is $750,000. You are going to pay $750,000 for reindeer, and you are going to furnish $1,250,000 to buy up a lot of this equipment and put the Government in the slaughterhouse business. This is what you are going to do.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. As I understand the bill, this is not for the Eskimos alone but applies to any native of Alaska. I refer the gentleman to section 8, which reads as follows:

> The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to distribute the reindeer and other property acquired by the United States under this act among the Eskimos or other natives of Alaska.

Mr. RICH. Sure; anything we do for the people up there is for the Eskimos and for the people of Alaska. However, I think Uncle Sam has been a mighty good Santa Claus to the people of Alaska all through the years, and I say this not only because of this bill. Uncle Sam has furnished them with reindeer and has been doing it annually.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. CREAL. The gentleman spoke of Santa Claus and the reindeer. Does the gentleman have any information about whether or not the eight reindeer that Santa Claus drives will be provided for under this bill?

Mr. RICH. If you pass this bill you are furnishing the eight reindeer to be the means of providing 250,000 more reindeer up there for the Eskimos, as well as the other individuals in Alaska. This is in addition to the care and attention given these people in the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. It has been recognized throughout the ages that the reindeer is the animal that carries the message of good cheer to the boys and girls and men and women, and do I understand the gentleman to be taking the position here that he does not believe in Santa Claus spreading a little good cheer to these people in Alaska who have cared for these animals down through the ages? [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Under the Interior Department appropriation bill the Congress has furnished the people of Alaska and the Eskimos what they have requested, and never was there a thought of saying that we were going to be called upon to furnish 750,000 more reindeer up there. We will have more reindeer, times over, than there are Eskimos and natives in Alaska.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman suppose that butchered reindeer sent down here would be any good to Santa Claus?

Mr. RICH. It certainly would not be any good to the people of Alaska, and not much to the people of the States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Have any reliable figures been presented showing the amount of actual cash investment in this undertaking in the way of fixed equipment, cabins, corrals, and so forth?

Mr. RICH. The list as given me shows $750,000 for reindeer and $1,250,000 for five cold-storage plants, an abattoir, a corral system, cabins, and other equipment. No itemized inventory has been submitted that I know of.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the price to be paid?

Mr. RICH. Yes; there is no inventory of this matter. Nobody knows actually what they are buying; and, in addition to this, what do these Eskimos in Alaska need all this equipment for? They have never had it before, and they would not know how to use it, and I am sure would not want it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman know anything about what this company was capitalized for—in other words, are we handing them a 200-percent cash dividend by this purchase?

Mr. RICH. Let me say to the gentleman that if there had been any thought of this matter coming before the Interior Department subcommittee on appropriations, we would have made an investigation of it, but it comes in here as a surprise measure. Not a soul has ever mentioned it to the members of our subcommittee. There is not a member of the subcommittee on the Interior appropriation bill who will stand up here and say that one word was ever uttered before the committee about this purchase, and even the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] cannot show us one word that was said in the hearings in reference to purchasing additional reindeer for the people of Alaska during this session of the Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. This is an authorization bill, and you must have the authorization first.

Mr. RICH. Yes; you are going to get an authorization, but as Members of Congress we know that if you allow this bill to pass, then you are going to come in here for the $2,000,000, and how many Members on this side of the House, or how many Members on that side of the House know where there is $2,000,000 in our Treasury today to be wasted in this manner? The most serious thing confronting this Nation is how you are going to take care of the Treasury, and if you authorize this appropriation then you are going to be asked to furnish the money, and how are you going to do it. Where are you going to get the money? You have got to go back to the taxpayers of your districts and ask them to furnish the money when it is not needed in Alaska.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Leaving out the question of where we are going to get the money for the moment, if this bill goes through and if we buy these reindeer from this corporation, we will also be buying processing plants, slaughterhouses, and other agencies to reduce the reindeer to meat and then market the meat. After we have done this, then we must follow it up by putting the Department of the Interior into the business of slaughtering and marketing these things in this country in competition with our own business interests.

Mr. RICH. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman agree with the philosophy that has been expounded by the Delegate from Alaska that these reindeer should be held exclusively for the Eskimos?

Mr. RICH. In view of the testimony given by the Delegate from Alaska before our subcommittee, it surprises me to know that the Delegate from Alaska would come in here and want the Government to spend this $2,000,000 for these reindeer and for this equipment. It seems to me if he had had this in mind when he came before the subcommittee on the Interior Department appropriation bill, he certainly would have said something about it. I am not questioning his motives, but for the life of me I cannot understand, after we have tried to do what the gentleman wanted us to do in taking care of the Eskimos in Alaska, why he should now ask that the Government go into this kind of business, why we should buy all these stock pens and these abattoirs and a number of camp sites, together with a number of stables, when all this is certainly not necessary for the protection of the Eskimo, and, certainly, the meat that we are going to get from the 750,000 reindeer will not be needed this year. The proposition is not needed for Eskimos. It is a Santa Clause bill for this corporation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania 1 minute more.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, if these ranges are to be preserved entirely for the Eskimo for grazing and ownership, will we not eventually be forced to pay a price, of one sum or another, to those from whom we gather the rights and thereby retire them from the field? That is the reason I asked the question awhile ago whether the gentleman is in favor of holding this range for the benefit of the Eskimo.

Mr. RICH. The land is public land. The Eskimos can raise their reindeer on it as well as the other people, and there is no necessity under the law for us to come in here and buy up these 750,000 reindeer now, because there is a lot of reindeer there, as the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] says, and they do not know who is whose. The Secretary of the Interior now has jurisdiction of the lands.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If we ever decide to retire everybody from the field except the Eskimo, when we have reached that decision, let us determine what we are to pay these people for their assets.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman would not prohibit the people of Alaska from raising reindeer for the benefit of themselves as well as for the Eskimo?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No.

Mr. RICH. We want to give it to all the people of Alaska. Treat everybody in Alaska alike, that is my principal to follow in Alaska, as well as the States.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time to call to the attention of the distinguished Members of this body a situation which is of paramount importance to the people of this Nation, and particularly to the investors of America.

Canada, our friendly neighbor on the north, is confronted with a debt burden which is both critical and topheavy. In this connection I quote from a news dispatch found in the Montreal Gazette of Tuesday, June 15, 1937, in which Captain Innes, chairman of the Commercial Bureau of Canada, is quoted as saying:

> It is the opinion of the bureau, after years of study, that Canada is today the most costly governed and the most overgoverned nation in the world. Our population is less than 11,000,000 and the cost of government in 1935 was slightly over a billion dollars.

The captain continues by saying:

> Our total public debt now exceeds $7,000,000,000, which is equivalent to $3,500 for every householder in Canada.

It is my sincere opinion and profound conviction that the Canadian Dominion debt of more than $4,000,000,000, which increases to over $7,000,000,000 if other public obligations are considered, and which must be supported, maintained, and paid off by only 11,000,000 people, will collapse of its own weight. I believe that it is the purpose of our good friends to transfer as much of this debt as is possible to American investors before their debt bubble bursts.

Therefore, on May 7 I introduced H. R. 7090, which has for its primary purpose the prohibition of further financing in this country by foreign governments which are possessions, subdivisions, or parts of the general government of those nations which are in default of their debts to us. In other words, this bill contemplates that the provisions of the Johnson Act shall apply specifically to the Dominion of Canada as a part of the British Empire.

A companion bill, S. 1845, has been introduced in the Senate by Hon. ALLEN J. ELLENDER, of Louisiana. His remarks of January contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are very pertinent to the situation which now exists, namely, the recent and projected financing plans of our good neighbor on the north. This bill was introduced and I ask for its immediate consideration and passage for two broad and general reasons:

First. Canada has borrowed through its Dominion and Provincial governments, and will continue to borrow from the investors of this country, large amounts of money to finance those deficits of her socialized railroads and ports which are competitive with our transportation industries and which, because of this competition, continue to throw American labor on relief rolls which must be supported by the taxpayers of this Nation.

Second. Because of coolness which has been developing in United Kingdom money markets toward further Canadian financing, it appears that our friendly neighbor is turning longing eyes toward American investors in order that her top-heavy Dominion debt as well as the provincial obligations which the Dominion may gradually have to assume, shall be transferred to us, a Nation which has been so disastrously a financial Santa Claus for foreign loans through the persuasion and financial domination of international banking interests. This possible transfer of Canadian debt to the United States may very well be a step toward the odious repatriation formula of scaling down governmental externally held debts which has already been experienced by the American investor in the cases of Germany, Newfoundland and the defaults of Great Britain, France, and other nations too numerous to mention.

With your permission, in support of my first contention, I shall discuss circumstances which may appear to be purely local. However, the terrible example found in my own city of Portland, Maine, is an outstanding illustration of the type of international discrimination against one of our own States which is being financed by our own citizens through Canadian investments.

I believe that the deplorable conditions existing today on our waterfront in Portland are due primarily and almost wholly to Canadian nationalistic and British imperialistic trade and transportation discriminations. I also believe that if we force Canada to stand on her own financial feet that her taxpayers will soon demand a change of policy in her now socialized and nationalized transportation activities.

A quarter of a century ago Portland, with a port second to none on the Atlantic seaboard in natural and geographic advantages, was teeming and bustling with maritime activity. For years our port had been the natural economic Atlantic transshipment port for the trade of Montreal and midwestern America and Canada. This was true even in the days of the oxcart, when the trails between Portland and Montreal were utilized for the transportation of commodities from tidewater in Portland to the consumers in Montreal and other points along the route.

The Grand Trunk Railroad, the now Government owned and operated Canadian National Railway, had its Atlantic terminus in our port with grain elevators and modern efficient wharves and warehouses. Imports, exports, and passenger travel made our water front a veritable beehive of industry. Longshoremen by the hundreds were able to earn a decent annual income, rear families, pay their bills, and contribute to productive activity. Stevedores and wholesale houses likewise profited because of this great industry of trans-Atlantic shipments. The retail stores of our city were locally owned and operated, extending to the workers of the water front an opportunity of turning over their wage dollars in our own city and State. From a local point of view, this healthy situation of a locality existing and prospering because of productive activity on our wharves was dependent upon Canada continuing Portland as her Atlantic transshipment port.

But today what a contrast! Our water front resembles a ghost picture of its former self. The Canadian-owned grain elevators and rotting wharves, which, by the way, occupy a large portion of our most desirable deep-water frontage, constitute a picture of deserted desolation.

The former busy Grand Trunk Railroad terminal and Canadian trans-Atlantic terminal is now covered with weeds and grass. This really constitutes a fire hazard and menace to our city. A few caretakers and railroad employees on C. N. R. pay rolls are all that remain of a former gold mine of purchasing power for the merchants of Portland and to outlying areas throughout the city.

To what can we attribute this present contrast of abandonment with the former condition of industrial life and activity? The fundamental cause for this deterioration has been well discussed in an editorial appearing in the issue of September 26, 1925, of the Portland Press Herald, which reads as follows:

MR. MEIGHEN'S IDEA

Very frank was Arthur Meighen, the Canadian conservative leader, in his discussion of Portland's relations to the Canadian National Railways. Mr. Meighen, in a speech at St. John, expressed the opinion that the Dominion should keep its terminals here and not sell them—as the Government had offered to do—with a view of blocking all competition on the part of Portland with the ports of the maritime provinces. He feared that if the Maine terminals were placed in the hands of private interests "there would be a bitter struggle for business offerings", and he intimated that the private company might make it very interesting for the Canadian ports. In other words, he would have Canada retain possession of the terminals in this city, not to use them, but to prevent anyone else using them. He would "dry up Portland" now, as he very graphically expressed it, but for the effect this process might have upon Canadian trade.

It is no secret that the Portland terminals are already "dried up" so far as the management of the Canadian National Railways can accomplish that purpose. The only use that is made of them is what the managers are compelled to make. The Atlantic & St. Lawrence Railroad is a local line now, and but little more. How long this state of affairs can continue—how long the Canadian Government can keep these great properties idle, for the sake of winning political favor with the ports of St. John and Halifax, will be for the future to determine. It is a tremendously expensive proposition for which the taxpayers of all the Dominion are paying. Not only that, but it is uneconomic, and the Canadian shippers are paying the cost of it. Mr. Meighen admits as much, in expressing fear of the adverse effect the closing of the port here will have upon Canadian trade. The cost of shipping freight from Montreal to St. John and Halifax is vastly greater than sending it to Portland. This cost must be paid either in the form of taxes or by the shippers. One or the other or both must assume the burden. If the shippers are made to pay, the cost must prove a serious handicap to them in meeting competition which they must contend against in the European markets. The taxpayers of Quebec, Ontario, and the Northwest may be willing to settle interminably for the sake of diverting traffic to St. John and Halifax, but if they prove to be, they will be different from taxpayers elsewhere.

As for the Canadian National holding to their properties here in order to prevent their use by others, Portland and the State of Maine may have something to say about that. The Canadian Government is powerful, but it has no authority to place an embargo on the port of Portland.

I agree quite fully with the sentiments expressed in the above recorded editorial because I feel most strongly that this picture of demoralization of the largest city of Maine has resulted from premeditated and planned foreign port and railroad competition. This action on the part of Canada was only natural and I do not complain of what she has done but I do object vigorously to the proposition where Maine and the United States have apathetically permitted a foreign nation aided and abetted by her mother country, Great Britain, to finance in our own country such a ruinous result to our own welfare.

At the present time American investors hold nearly $2,000,000,000 worth of Canadian bonds. At the present time some $400,000 worth of these are in default of their interest and I note from recent newspaper releases that the Province of Alberta has already defaulted its bond maturities due on June 1, 1937.

Many of these bonds are held in New England by individuals and institutions and this default will have a further depressing effect upon the market quotations which are now in the low sixties due to the previous action of the province in offering half payment of interest on their coupon rate.

American citizens already have had experience with defaulting Great Britain. American investors already have experienced losses and discriminating bond conversions on the part of Newfoundland, another integral part of the British Empire. It is unnecessary in this comparatively brief discourse to accumulate further evidence as to the stake which American investors have in the foreign holdings of Canadian securities. But it is interesting, in my opinion, to survey the part which is being played by railroads and ports of Canada competitive with United States industries in the accumulation of deficits which are being continually financed through the credit facilities of the Canadian Government in America. With respect to the contribution which the Canadian National Railway, which is Government owned and operated, is making to the Canadian National Government debt, I quote from an editorial appearing in the Montreal Gazette March 24, 1937:

It has been estimated that three-fourths of the combined debt of the Government and the Canadian National Railways to the public is more or less directly attributed to the Government's entry into the railway business.

To support my contention that a large portion of this railway deficit is financed in America, I quote from an article appearing in the Halifax Herald of April 12, 1935:

Talk about the people of Canada owning the Canadian National Railway, why the very rolling stock on it, or a very large proportion of it at least, is owned in the United States. True it was built in Canada, but the money to pay for it was borrowed across the line, and the bonds are over there on which interest is being paid.

As a further illustration of the interest which American investors have in the subsidized port activities of Canada, I quote from an advertisement by the brokerage concern of Wood, Gundy & Co., Ltd., 360 St. James Street, Montreal:

St. John Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Co., Ltd., first mortgage, 4 percent bonds, due July 5, 1957, fully secured by Dominion of Canada subsidy; * * * Government of the Dominion of Canada is unconditionally bound throughout the life of the bonds to make subsidy payments to the trustee for the holders of the bonds sufficient to pay principal and interest when due.

These are only isolated instances of the financial activities which are being carried on through the participation of the American public in a scheme of socialized transportation both from a railroad and port standpoint.

Please bear in mind that these American dollars are helping to subsidize the direct competition of Canadian nationalistic policies at the expense of American transportation systems and port activities which, because of the lack of trans-Atlantic shipping, is causing our relief rolls to be swollen with unemployed water-front workers. Thus with one hand we feed our neighbors and with the other tax ourselves to support our own people on nonproductive Government projects, brought about because of the very competition which we finance.

Also bear in mind that the stake of United States citizens in our own railroads with which these Canadian-owned transportation activities are in competition is very nearly a half billion dollars.

It has been brought to my attention, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that the attitude of the Government officials here in the United States, and the opinion regarding this problem in my own State, developed through newspaper policy, has been one of fear and timidity because of the potential possibility of reprisals by the Canadian Government if we take militant and progressive steps to protect our own welfare. In this regard, let me call to your attention certain Canadian press stories which illustrate the militant and progressive attitude of Canada and Great Britain, when there is any semblance of the possibility of United States citizens participating in transportation activity in Canada, which I have previously stated, is being materially financed by our own banks and individual investors. In this connection, this story appeared in the Montreal Gazette of January 26, 1937:

The British Government has "apparently cracked down" on the shipment to the United Kingdom under the 6-cent wheat preference of Canadian grain that has been stored in United States elevators. * * * At one time American and Canadian grain shippers made free use of each other's elevators, but this ruling will still further decrease the small amount of Canadian wheat now stored in United States ports.

Let me quote further regarding this particular point from the Telegraph Journal, of St. John, on March 4, 1935. An editorial in this issue of the paper speaking of the C. N. R. and Canadian ports reads as follows:

It is about time somebody in authority took to task those officials of the Canadian National Railways who have been carrying on the business of the company in such a way as to affect detrimentally Canadian national ports * * *. A portion, therefore, is being diverted to Portland, which was the western terminus of the Grand Trunk Railway before Canadians adopted the present general policy of shipping their own goods through their own ports and giving the maximum of employment to Canadian railwaymen and Canadian port workers. Here is a railway which to all intents and purposes is a department of Dominion government which persists in discriminating against the port of St. John, as a national port at the expense of the taxpayers and workers of this country. Somebody should be made to answer for this and to take such steps as will prevent its continuation.

As further evidence of this militant position which I personally admire and which we of Portland, Maine, and the United States need to copy, there is found a newspaper story appearing in the St. John Telegraph Journal of March 29, 1935:

Spurred on by the success that greeted its demands for an investigation into the drydocking of two Canadian national steamships in New York, the St. John Board of Trade yesterday asked for an investigation into the use of Portland, Maine, by the Canadian National Railways for the export of 2,000 tons of newsprint to Australia.

In this connection again let me quote for you the headline appearing in a Canadian newspaper dated March 22, 1935, which reads as follows:

Repair of Canadian national ships in New York is called "outrage." Commons hears vigorous protests.

On March 25, 1935, the same newspaper carried an editorial which reads in part as follows:

It is just as serious a matter to give employment to foreign railway employees and foreign port workers in Portland, Maine, in the handling of Canadian exports as it is to give work to foreign dry dock employees in connection with the repairing of Canadian ships. * * * Apparently here are officers of a Canadian institution who cannot see the logic of forcing Canadian trade outward as well as inward through Canadian ports. It is about time there was a complete investigation into the attitude of Canadian national officials toward Canadian ports.

Such instances could be cited time and time again emphasizing this militant and progressive attitude of Canada without thought of the reprisals so feared by our own people in respect to the adoption of a similar attitude. But many of us in Maine believe that the time has come for positive and aggressive action in the place of the apathetic practice of pussyfooting which has permitted the loss of this great maritime industry in the port of Portland through the past 15 years.

I do not blame the good neighbors on the north for their policy. On the contrary, I commend them for continually fighting and demanding recognition of their own workmen and industries. However, I do object and object strenuously to a further continuance of United States financing of the deficits of the Canadian National Railways and Canadian ports through the sales of Canadian Government bonds in our markets. These deficits are piled up yearly because of the uneconomic use of seaports hundreds of miles farther away from Montreal and the Midwest than are available ports in America, which were formerly used by Canada on a sound economic basis. Americans should not be permitted in my opinion to finance their own destructive competitions which will eventually blow the Canadian debt bubble to over-expanded limits. Such a course can only lead to disaster for American investors.

I beg your further indulgence while I call to your attention the present financial dilemma in which the Canadian Dominion Government finds itself. This story can be well told as a basis for my second contention of support of House Resolution 7090, namely, that because of coolness developing in the money markets of the United Kingdom toward further Canadian financing, it appears that Canadian financiers are casting their eyes longingly toward America for a refunding of her bond issues and for a source of new money necessary to support the defaulting provinces and continuing railroad deficits. In this connection I quote from an editorial appearing less than 2 weeks ago in the Montreal Gazette, entitled "Canada's Credit—Past and Future:"

It is impossible to overstress the gravity of a statement made * * * with reference to the injury which the public credit of Canada has sustained in the money market of the United Kingdom. * * * The present situation in regard to Canadian credit in London is exceedingly difficult. * * * There is no reason at all to question the statement that the Hepburns, McGeers, and others have been instrumental in shaking the foundations of Canadian credit in the United Kingdom, but these brokers, and the British investors as a whole, have had other things to disturb them and to weaken their confidence in Canada. It is idle to suppose that they have been impressed otherwise than unfavorably by the condition of the federal finances themselves and by the policy which the Canadian Government and Parliament have recently pursued in regard to Canadian Government in business. * * * Nor are the tremendous losses which the country is sustaining annually in absorbing the deficits of the publicly owned railway system a matter of indifference to the British investor.

This Mr. Hepburn, Premier of Ontario, who is referred to in this quotation as being effective in helping to break down Canadian credit in the United Kingdom, is the same gentleman who has so recently taken the attitude that American labor in its organization efforts is being influenced by racketeers and subversive leadership.

With respect to the additional load which is being thrown on Canadian Dominion debt by the increasing need to assist in provincial financing, I quote from the New York Times of April 9, 1935:

In the last 2 or 3 years the Federal Government has been obliged to advance some $38,000,000 to the four Western Provinces to assist them in meeting their due payments of principal and interest on bond issues, most of the money going to holders in the United States. * * * Without the aid of the Dominion Treasury it is quite possible some Provincial bonds would have defaulted in New York and this could not be permitted to happen because it could not be certain that American investors would make any fine distinction between bonds of a Province and bonds of the Dominion of which the Province forms a part.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the present Alberta default apparently is not being cushioned by the Canadian Dominion Government, although the holders of these bonds without doubt are in many cases unfortunate American investors who have trusted in what is commonly supposed to be the solidity of Canadian financial affairs. As we project our thought into the possible future situation, so far as American bondholders of Canadian securities are concerned, it is interesting to check the situation which confronts the Province of New Brunswick as of its last fiscal year. I quote from the Montreal Gazette of January 27, 1937, namely, "New Brunswick finished the fiscal year 1936 with a deficit of $424,969—the seventh in a row."

This will throw an additional burden upon the Canadian national financial picture. As to what has happened in the past with regard to integral parts of the British Empire, it is interesting to know the debt-conversion plan of Newfoundland. The Montreal Gazette of November 23, 1935, carried this story:

Newfoundland plan attacked. * * * Discrimination against United States bondholders is charged. * * * New York has every right to complain of this gross discrimination in favor of the British bondholders and we may be sure that New York will. * * * It is not likely that New York bondholders can obtain redress unless they persuade the United States Government to protest officially as the British Government has just done on behalf of holders of German bonds here.

I could multiply the recent financial development many times with the one thought in mind that you gentlemen must be convinced of the seriousness of this problem. I feel that in some way we must check the possibilities of further Canadian financing in this country in order that United States investors may be protected and in order that American dollars may not be used by foreign governments to subsidize competition to American industries. As to the future plans of Canadian financiers, it is pertinent to quote from the Montreal Gazette of February 17, 1937:

The Dominion Government is anxious to avoid further defaults on the part of the western Provinces, fearing that the effect would be serious impairment of Canadian credit in New York, where Dominion Government refunding operations on a maturity of $236,000,000 must be undertaken this autumn.

This particular wish and desire on the part of the Canadian Dominion Government has apparently not been carried out with respect to the recent default of the Province of Alberta within the past few days. In my opinion this is but a forerunner of the serious defaults which are indicated for the future. It is my frank and sincere desire to protect American bondholders of Canadian securities against any further defaults, as well as against any possible repatriation policy, such as we have already experienced in the outstanding example of Germany. Certainly you and I, as Members of this United States Congress, wish to protect in every way we can the interests of our own people, and, furthermore, we do not wish to be a party, I know, to a further subsidizing of foreign transportation systems by our own people. In conclusion, I summarize as follows:

First. According to statements by her leading citizens, both statesmen and economists, Canadian debt is top-heavy and critical. I believe it is contemplated that this debt load shall be transferred under British example so far as possible to American investors, directly and indirectly.

Second. The socialized transportation system of Canada, both railroad and maritime, has contributed, and is contributing, heavily to the Government debt load. This procedure of piling up tremendous deficits is being occasioned to a material degree by the nationalizing policy of Canada practically prohibiting the use of economic American ports for the transshipment of British trans-Atlantic traffic.

Third. American investors are materially aiding in subsidizing this uneconomic practice when they purchase Canadian Government bonds in our own markets; in addition, these same investors are paying taxes to support American labor thrown on relief rolls because of their very support of these foreign policies.

So, gentlemen, I close these remarks with the one plea that we begin to think and act in terms of protection for the American investing public, the American laborer, and the American citizen in general. This policy can be carried out at least in one fundamental way, by refusing Canada, as a part of defaulting Great Britain, the right to compete and continue further financing here in America. To this end let us enact H. R. 7090 into law. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, this question is not a new one. A year or two ago when I was a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Interior Department, the matter was presented in some detail before that committee. Speaking in large measure from memory, I believe that it has been our consistent policy from the outset to bring about the result that we are ostensibly trying to achieve through the bill before us at this time. If I am not mistaken, over a period of a good many years the United States has striven to develop the reindeer industry for the benefit of the natives of Alaska, and for their benefit alone. We have not succeeded, however, in accomplishing that result. Other interests have come into the picture and have acquired reindeer, in spite of the policy of Uncle Sam, and today we are asked to authorize an appropriation of $2,000,000 to bring about the result we have tried to accomplish without success over this period of years, by bailing out, as I see it, the Loman interests and perhaps other interests that have acquired reindeer in opposition to our consistent national policy, and in certain instances, I think, under conditions which have raised a real question as to the legality of the acquisition, we are asked to make this large appropriation in the face of an adverse recommendation by the Bureau of the Budget and with no assurance whatsoever that history will not repeat itself.

May I call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that this bill would authorize an appropriation of $2,000,000. About a year ago when the subject was before the Committee on Appropriations, the supervisor of Alaskan affairs, Mr. Gordon, testified that the best estimate that could be made, and I emphasize the word estimate for no accurate count has been made, was to the effect that there were about 500,000 reindeer in all in Alaska, and that of that total perhaps 20 percent were in the hands of nonnatives. He also testified that a fair value per head at that time was about $2. In other words, for 100,000 reindeer at $2 a head, we are about to authorize an appropriation, not of $200,000, but of $2,000,000. Exactly what the balance is to cover I do not know.

I call attention also to the hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Interior Department for the year 1937, at page 516. Note carefully the following quotation from Mr. Gordon, the Supervisor of Alaskan Affairs. Speaking of the offer leading to this legislation, an offer made on behalf of the Loman interests, by Mr. A. J. Baldwin, he testified as follows:

In making the offer to the Department of the Interior, Mr. Baldwin explained that it was made not upon the basis of the actual property involved, which, in his opinion, was worth considerably more than the sum of the offer—it was also made upon the basis of the amount that would be necessary for the livestock corporation to expend in liquidation of the corporation—that, in order to sell these assets, it would be necessary for them to do several things, the principal ones of which are:

First, to buy and satisfy a group of minority stockholders that had never been bought out during the history of the company; and that it would be necessary for them to satisfy the creditors of the Northwestern Livestock Corporation.

I cite this testimony as indicating definitely that as a part of this plan we are called upon to bail out these Lowman interests and take care of minority stockholders and creditors as well.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the funny thing about this rule is that no one has given us any reason whatever why this bill should be passed; what situation it seeks to deal with or what the bill does or what they propose to do with the $2,000,000 if they get their fingers on it. All we know about it, frankly, is what the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Massachusetts have told us about the reindeer situation and about the situation which they understand exists with reference to what is to be done with the money.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The Delegate from Alaska spoke for 16 minutes.

Mr. TABER. But he did not tell us how many reindeer there were up there, what the situation was with reference to the reindeer, what situation there was with reference to the natives that it was proposed to correct by this bill, or anything of that character. So that we have no picture whatever before the House as to what it is all about.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the gentleman in his research found anything at all which shows the financial structure of this company, the cost of its assets, the money invested in these different types of equipment, the amount of liquidated dividends that could probably be given to the stockholders? I listened very carefully and the Delegate from Alaska did not inform us with respect thereto.

Mr. TABER. All I can tell is a little bit about the situation. Mr. Gordon, head of the Reindeer Service in the Interior Department, brought up a proposal with reference to these reindeer before the Appropriations Committee in December 1935 or January 1936. He stated at that time that the first reindeer purchases by whites were secured by Lowman & Co. in 1914 from a Lapp by the name of Alfred Nalima. In the contract which the United States Government signed with the Lapp herders or drivers that were to come to this country was included a clause that after the period when the contract terminated, they could take their pay in either of two ways, in money or deer. The Lapps being primarily deer men often took their pay in deer, so that Alfred Nalima secured his deer from the United States Government because of his service to the United States Government and to the natives, and he then in turn disposed of them.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. How many deer did they acquire at that time from Alfred Nalima?

Mr. GORDON. I am afraid I cannot inform you without reference to the figures, but, as I recall it, it was in the neighborhood of 1,200.

Now, that was about 1914. I do not know how many reindeer this particular outfit has at the present time, but if they are going to pay $750,000, or whatever figure it was that the gentleman from Pennsylvania gave us, that he understood was set up to be used out of the $2,000,000, for 1,200 reindeer, and what increase there might be, with killing off a large number for marketing purposes in between, I would say that at $2 a head it was a powerfully big price.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I do not know whether anything has been said about the population of Alaska, but according to the last census the population was just under 60,000. If you divide 60,000 into $2,000,000, it makes about $35 for every person in Alaska. Consequently I would say it is a case of bringing Santa Claus to the reindeer, instead of bringing the reindeer to Santa Claus. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. I am inclined to think there is a good deal to that idea.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If Congress should decide to preserve these reindeer for the Eskimos and drive out private interests, would we have authority to bring condemnation proceedings and arrive at the value of the property to be paid for?

Mr. TABER. I think we have the power under the right of eminent domain to take any property as long as we pay its fair value for it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back 3 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of the time, 3 minutes, to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, it is always pertinent when you have an appropriation to make to see whether there is not some other purpose for which you could use the same money and get more results. Some 10 or 12 times this spring I have received letters, and doubtless all of the boys from the rural areas have, which said that the lone mule had died and this family had no other means of procuring a mule to finish the crop. Occasionally the lone cow had died and there were no other means of getting a cow.

Two million dollars for second-hand mules, such as they use on some of the hillsides of Kentucky in the tobacco crop, would get 50,000 at $40 apiece. It would get the same number of cows. Fifty thousand families! Charity begins at home.

Suppose this proposition were double-barreled—you never have legislation in that form—suppose the question put to you were whether or not these relief families should have $2,000,000 for the purchase of cows in families where they had lost the sole cow or the sole mule, or whether it should be spent on 18,000 Eskimo Indians. I have an idea you boys from the farm belt would not vote for the Eskimo Indians and go back and ask your families who have lost a mule or a cow to support you.

I understood the gentleman to say there were only 18,000 Eskimo Indians. Stop and think what this same money will do—where charity begins—for 50,000 American citizens. For this reason I am going to be against this bill.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. I yield.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Is not the Government already furnishing education and support to these Eskimos?

Mr. CREAL. Yes; and will continue to after buying these reindeer. That will not make any difference.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman realizes, I hope, that Alaska is a part of our country.

Mr. CREAL. Yes; but they are not quite as close to us as these boys.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. They are part of us. The gentleman would not want to let them starve to death.

Mr. CREAL. They have been living for these thousands of years and have not starved. Our people are starving.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Two million dollars would provide only $100 a funeral.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGE—MARINE HOSPITAL, FLORIDA (H. DOC. NO. 364)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I am withholding my approval of H. R. 4716, authorizing the construction and equipment of a marine hospital in the State of Florida.

It is true that, while there is at the present time a marine hospital at Key West, in the State of Florida, this hospital is old and not in a good state of repair. I recognize that a new marine hospital will have to be erected soon, but there is no emergency need at the present moment.

Therefore, because I am seeking to curtail expenditures, I am forced to disapprove many items which are desirable but not of a pressing nature. Such a hospital falls into this category.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 20, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and the veto message be referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGE—GEORGE R. BROWN (H. DOC. NO. 363)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 4156, "An act for the relief of George R. Brown."

This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George R. Brown, a former second lieutenant, the sum of $698.90, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for pay from the date of his alleged discharge and last receipt of pay, August 9, 1917, to the alleged date of the receipt of notification of his discharge on January 7, 1918.

The evidence in this case shows that the claimant accepted his discharge from the Army as of August 8, 1917; that he then returned to his home and engaged in private business; and that he performed no duty as an officer of the Army during any portion of the period for which the pending measure would compensate him.

I cannot feel that, in the face of this evidence, I would be justified in approving this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 20, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message of the President, together with the bill, be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

THE REINDEER INDUSTRY OF ALASKA

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1722) to provide subsistence for the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska by establishing for them a permanent and self-sustaining economy; to incourage and develop native activity in all branches of the reindeer industry; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1722, with Mr. GREENWOOD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to myself.

Mr. Chairman, I was somewhat surprised at the unusual fear expressed by some of our colleagues as to what might be the result if this bill were enacted into law. The statement that the reindeer business could grow into millions, interfere with the meat-producing business, and crowd out the beef and pork producers of our country is far beyond the usual limits to which the flight of imagination goes.

This bill has for its purpose to permit the Department of the Interior to purchase the claims which are now held by white men to reindeer in the Territory of Alaska. It happens that several white owners and white-owner corporations have gone into the reindeer business in Alaska. There is a clash between the whites and the Eskimos over reindeer.

As is usually the case in a clash between white men and Indians, the Indian has received, and we believe is receiving, the worst end of the bargain. The better range is taken up by the white man and his reindeer, and the poor Eskimo is pushed on up farther toward the North Pole and out into the Pacific Ocean; in fact, he is hardly able to operate his little reindeer business, and produce his needs for food and clothing. Reindeer moss or food grows only about one-eighth of an inch each year. When reindeer run over the range, whether they eat the moss or not it is trampled down and destroyed. This is what has happened to a large portion of the range which is supposed to be in the possession of the native owners. The Eskimos' herd is depleted because his range has been destroyed to a large extent.

He practically has no market for the reindeer he can produce because of the fact the white owner has beaten down the price of the meat that he sells. If we pass this bill, the result we hope will be, and I think it will be, that as the white Alaskan reindeer owner vanishes from Alaska the native owner and the native Eskimo will be enabled to survive without the Federal Government having to contribute to his existence. In other words, it will save in the future expenditures the Government will have to make for the relief of the Eskimos in Alaska.

It is true the bill carries an appropriation of $2,000,000. I do not know how much of this money will be used, but I know none of it will be used except such amount as is necessary to buy out the white man's claim. I do not know how many reindeer there are now in Alaska. I have information to the effect that there are some five or six hundred thousand head up there.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The grazing of the native herds and the white man's herds has not been successful in the locality as far as range management is concerned; so that, as the gentleman has stated, the range management for the natives is being crowded out, and the native and white man's herds being grazed in the same locality has been unsuccessful?

Mr. GREEN. Obviously.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is one of the objects of the bill. Ultimately we may lose both the white and native herds unless we pass this bill?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman has just stated is true. Unless the range is protected it is going to be practically destroyed. The main food of the Eskimo is reindeer meat. Of course, he wants other meat and he wants other things which he can get from this country, and when he is enabled to do so he buys those things. But he has to fall back on the reindeer for his food supply and for practically all of his clothing.

The purpose of this bill is to try to help him survive in his native way, in his native land, without being destroyed by the white encroachment. The money that will be appropriated under this bill will be expended judiciously and the Federal Government will have control, either directly or indirectly, of every reindeer that is bought under the provisions of this bill. I may say the Federal Government did the same thing in helping the natives so far as the fishing industry is concerned. It has protected the natives in their fishing rights. We are doing all we can, you and I as Members of Congress, to enable the natives of Alaska to survive at a minimum expense to the Federal Government and that is the purpose of the pending resolution.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Some years ago we had to take over the control of the seal industry up there in order to prevent the seals from being exterminated.

Mr. GREEN. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is a matter of fact that where these reindeer graze unless there is intelligent control the range is ruined?

Mr. GREEN. That is true.

Mr. KNUTSON. From overcropping, and it takes from 15 to 20 years for a new crop of moss to develop?

Mr. GREEN. It grows at the rate of one-eighth of an inch a year.

Mr. KNUTSON. It takes 18 years on an average for a new crop to grow. Unless there is intelligent control of the grazing up there, and it can only be done through the Government, the result will be that we are going to have a permanent relief problem on our hands when the reindeer become exterminated through lack of food?

Mr. GREEN. Exactly; and the reindeer cannot be controlled and protected as long as you have a clash between the native and white owner.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I was interested in the statement that there were several white owners of reindeer in Alaska.

Mr. GREEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I wonder if the gentleman would be good enough to place in the RECORD the names of some of the outstanding owners of reindeer in Alaska and if he will also tell the Committee about how many white owners have the bulk of the reindeer in Alaska?

Mr. GREEN. I will try to supply that information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it not true the Lomen interests own a large portion of the white-owned reindeer in Alaska?

Mr. GREEN. That is my understanding.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is there any truth in the rumor that they now have a white elephant on their hands and would like to get rid of it?

Mr. GREEN. No; I could not admit that, because I think the gentleman is mistaken. I know of no disposition to unload on the Government the investment of any person. I know that under the provisions of this bill the white owners will sell to the Government. On the other hand, the Federal Government is protected through the officials of the Interior Department, who will pay only a reasonable price, presumably $3 a head or less, for all deer purchased.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman not know that Mr. Lowman appeared before a certain committee a few years ago, at which time it was suggested that our Government take over his failing reindeer business?

Mr. GREEN. I did not know that. However, I do know the purposes of this bill.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I know the purpose of this bill is to try to protect the native owner in Alaska in order that he may survive without Federal assistance.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. DEMPSEY. May I ask the chairman of the committee if he does not know that Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma made a thorough investigation, and it was he who made the recommendation that this be done?

Mr. GREEN. I am pleased to have that contribution.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN. As I understand, a committee from the Senate investigated this project in Alaska and a group from the Department of the Interior investigated and approved it. This bill also has the approval of the President and of the Secretary of the Interior, and is in conformity with the financial program of the Budget.

Mr. GREEN. And in that connection, I do not believe there was any opposition to the bill in our committee.

I will not go further into this matter because the gentleman from Alaska will explain it further. I do commend it to the Members of the House as a meritorious bill and in the interest of economy. I hope there will be no opposition to the passage of this measure. Its motives are of the best. It is for the purpose of protecting the native Eskimo of Alaska in his own rights there, that the white man may not continue to encroach upon him and shove him to the North Pole and into the Pacific Ocean.

[Applause.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to use my time to ask the chairman of the committee one or two questions.

As I recall, a month or so ago, at least, this bill did not have the approval of the Budget. Has the situation changed in any way?

Mr. GREEN. Not that I know of, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS. In other words, the bill does not have the approval of the Budget?

Mr. GREEN. I am not advised on that. I am not sure the Budget has approved it. I am not sure whether it has or has not approved it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Is it not true that the Budget definitely opposed the bill in the committee? Does any majority member of the committee have any information to the contrary?

Mr. DIMOND. I may say that the gentleman is quite correct in his assumption that the bill does not have the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. ANDREWS. As I recall, the Department of the Interior has an idea of setting up some sort of cooperative associations under which we would develop groups of reindeer owners. These would be sort of ringleaders, and I believe they would be under the pay of the Department of the Interior. Am I correct in my understanding?

Mr. GREEN. The Department of the Interior would administer the bill and pay out the claim. Then the claim would be owned by the Government for distribution through the Department of the Interior to the natives.

Mr. ANDREWS. That would involve new employees of the Department of the Interior who would be charged with the administration of the various cooperatives?

Mr. GREEN. It is possible they would have to have a few employees to administer it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Then they would be an expense to the Government each year thereafter, the extent of which the Department itself cannot accurately estimate.

Mr. GREEN. The gentleman could not hope to administer any bill without employing somebody. This will save the Government money in the long run.

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, it is my judgment this measure should be adopted. When we took over the Territory of Alaska in 1867 we assumed certain obligations. While a preceding speaker spoke of doing something for the people nearer home, I cannot forget that the Eskimos up there live under the Stars and Stripes just as we do. We have done very little for the Alaskan Eskimo.

Before reindeer were introduced into the Territory a succession of famines swept over the Eskimo country, and it was for the purpose of putting an end to such a deplorable condition that the reindeer were brought into the Territory. As a result, the Eskimos of Alaska now have a dependable food supply. If this supply is destroyed, it will necessitate the constant extension of relief by the Federal Government to those unfortunate people. Conditions cannot go on as they are at the present time because of climatic conditions which prevail in that section of the United States. Owing to the peculiar growing conditions in the territory occupied by the Eskimos, it is absolutely necessary that we have intelligent regulation of grazing. As has been stated by a preceding speaker, I think the chairman of the committee, but one-eighth of an inch of moss gross annually. Where the range is once destroyed through overgrazing, it takes 18 to 20 years to restore it. This means that the entire area which is overgrazed becomes a desolate waste incapable of sustaining human life.

This bill carries an appropriation of something like $2,000,000. We do not know that the $2,000,000 is going to be required, but at 5 percent this is $100,000 a year. If an unfortunate condition should arise in Alaska as the result of the failure of Congress to act, and it should become necessary for the Federal Government to establish a permanent policy of relief in Alaska as a result thereof, how far would $100,000 a year go toward supporting 18,000 human beings? Seven times that amount would be required, and those unfortunate people would be a permanent charge upon the Federal Treasury.

The gentleman from New York fears that the cost of administration, which, of course, would be a permanent charge upon the Government, would be excessively high. I have read about the reindeer business. I think five or six men transported many thousand deer from Alaska clear up into the Mackenzie River country. They completed their trip only a few weeks ago.

Mr. COLLINS. Six thousand.

Mr. KNUTSON. Perhaps my figures are off, and I am pleased to be corrected. Anyway, I am satisfied that 6 or 10 people can administer this law and see that the interests of the Eskimos are protected and that the range on which these reindeer graze is protected for the future.

Personally, I think this is a mighty good bargain for the Government. I do not know what part of the $2,000,000 is going to be required, but I think that we can trust the Department of the Interior to see to it that the Government gets value received.

When the time comes to vote on this proposition, do not overlook the fact that by passing this measure we are obviating the necessity of creating a permanent relief problem in Alaska for the future, and doing so at a cost of less than $100,000 a year. Do not think of this amount as $2,000,000; think of it as the interest on $2,000,000. The Government can get all the money it wants for 3 percent or 3½ percent; so, as a matter of fact, it would be only about $60,000. By spending $60,000 a year we are insuring a permanent food supply to 18,000 people who live under the American flag. I call that good business, no matter from what angle viewed.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, when this bill first came to the committee I went into the committee with the full intention of opposing this legislation, but after I made a study of the savings to the Federal Government, I decided it would be an act of economy on the part of the Government, inasmuch as we now have the Eskimos on the relief rolls.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. TABER. Did the gentlemen of the committee make any study of the number of reindeer that would be affected by this move?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. TABER. How many?

Mr. MILLS. Approximately 350,000.

Mr. TABER. They belong to whom?

Mr. MILLS. They belong to various people.

Mr. TABER. How many belong to the white people?

Mr. MILLS. I cannot answer that question definitely, but there are not very many.

Mr. TABER. Not more than fifty or sixty thousand belong to the whites?

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman is about correct.

Mr. TABER. And they are worth about $3 a head?

Mr. MILLS. It was brought out in the testimony that they were worth about $3.

Mr. TABER. That would mean about $175,000, using liberal figures.

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. TABER. I cannot understand why they need any very expensive abattoir system or cold-storage system to take care of that number of reindeer. I wonder if the gentleman would not be in favor of reducing the authorization in this bill to about $300,000.

Mr. MILLS. I may say to the gentleman that we are not only purchasing approximately 350,000 reindeer, but all the equipment that the people up there now own.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes before us as a surprise measure. I feel that very few of the men in the House, and certainly hardly anyone on this side of the aisle, knew that it would be presented in the closing hours of this session. Many of us over here wish we might have known that the bill was coming in because, had we known it, we probably would have resorted to some authorities to secure information about it.

Probably some of us might have inquired about the opinion of the Liberty League or some might have inquired of the National Manufacturers Association, and then others of us might have had resort to a man who, in the last few days, has been held before the Nation as an authority. I confess that I have had recourse to Lord Macaulay and I tried in the very limited time at my command to see what Lord Macaulay had to say on the deer question. I searched from cover to cover and I could not find that Lord Macaulay had a thing to say about deer, deer of any kind, and it seems to me that before the committee that is sponsoring this measure should press this measure, it certainly should have had as a sustaining authority the opinion of Lord Macaulay on this subject.

Many of us on this side are rather interested in Lord Macaulay's opinion. We want to know, in other words, whether Lord Macaulay thought as much of deer as he does of democracy, and from what we have heard during the last few days, apparently, he did not think much of democracy. If he did not think much of democracy, maybe he did not think much about deer, and I wish you men over there would give us the benefit of any citations or any reference or any quotation you may have as to where Lord Macaulay stands on this subject. This is a mighty important thing. You need not have recourse to what your able majority leader might have to say on this subject; do not ask what any of the Cabinet men might have to say on this subject; do not go into the rock-ribbed South and ask what those splendid men of the South think about deer, but go after Lord Macaulay and see whether Lord Macaulay really is in favor of deer. If he is for it, then, bless your hearts, you ought to be for it. If Lord Macaulay is against it, then you should be against it. Lord Macaulay should mean much to everyone of you as you contemplate the prominent place he occupied in the recent Virginia Dare celebration.

In view of the limited time at my command to examine Lord Macaulay on the subject, I turned to another quotation and I call the attention of my beloved brethren on the Democratic side to this question. On page 7 of the report you will find that the statement is made that this program of deer, deer selling, deer corraling, deer pulling, and all kind of deering is not in accord with the financial program of the President.

Now, that is a bold statement for the Secretary of the Interior to make, because it is predicated on the assumption that we have a financial program, and really I would like to know from the proponents of this deer proposition what the financial program is. As we think of financial programs and dears we instinctively think of courtship, of wooing, of embraces. My, what a flood of memories crowd in on us. But all of us remember that dears came first and financial programs second in those days. As we thought of what dear might want, financial programs were relegated to the background. Is this another courtship period? These proponents of this deer-selling, deer-branding, deer-trading program should muster courage and tell us what the financial program of this administration really is. It reminds me a lot of what we called in the old days "a lark", a wild orgy, a riotous time, when a policy of reckless abandon prevailed. Dears were present on some of those occasions. Spend till you are broke was the slogan. That seems to be the policy today of the present administration.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. DITTER. Your policy, the New Deal policy, seems to be just that—spend as much as you can, save as little as possible, nothing if it can be avoided. Deer and spending joined together.

Mr. SHORT. Of course, I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania must realize that Santa Claus must have reindeer.

Mr. DITTER. Oh, I appreciate the observation and suggestion and that gives me another thought. In other words, what we are going to do now is not only to have Santa Claus but we are going to provide the reindeer as well. And all this in spite of what our friend, that renowned authority, Lord Macaulay, might have to say on the subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to be serious for a moment, I do hope you gentlemen on the other side will reject this measure. This is the most impractical thing that has ever been suggested from Alaska. Read the hearings on every Interior Department appropriation bill, and you will find that the Interior Department itself admits that it is almost impossible to know who own the deer that are roaming around Alaska; that the deer is a migratory animal, and that during the course of its roaming there is practically no means by which they may be identified, so far as ownership is concerned. That means one more thing, and that is that when it comes to paying the bill for this purchase, for this program you are presently bringing in, you will not know whom to pay, so far as ownership is concerned. Well, that is nothing unusual for this administration. Dear knows, you have been paying a lot of people during the last 4 years and they do not know why they are getting the money and you do not know why you are giving the money to them, so that probably this is in line with the policy of the administration, in line with the financial program of the last few years.

This measure should be rejected. It simply means the authority to draw out of the pockets of the taxpayers another $2,000,000 to hand over to some dear souls. It is a dear thing to do. But it is a mighty dear thing to continually drain the earnings and savings of the taxpayers, the working people, by such a measure. It means liquidating some men who went into the deer business in Alaska and want Uncle Sam to pay them off at this time. There are a lot of dear people here in the States who have never seen deer but who have some dear project on their hands they would like to have Uncle Sam liquidate for them.

We have a duty here today that requires us to forget our dear deer in Alaska and think about some dear people at home. I am concerned about their interests. Two million dollars will look good on the right side of the ledger to help offset some of this New Deal spending, so I plead with you to follow the President in this matter. Irrespective of the silence of Lord Macaulay on the subject, in spite of the failure of Lord Macaulay to tell us anything very substantial about deer or dears, I urge you to follow the advice of the President in this case. Here is one instance that I recommend his counsel to you, in the hope that a financial program, as yet undisclosed, may ultimately be revealed to us, Lord Macaulay to the contrary notwithstanding, and that when revealed the financial program will be an about face from the program of spending, borrowing, and wasting of the last 4 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that during my lifetime I was not able to get acquainted with the famous Lord Macaulay; but I do know this, with all due deference to my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], that whenever a man is at a loss for anything logical to say upon a question, he endeavors to reduce it to an absurdity. Let us look at this matter in a cold and practical light. We have the Eskimos in Alaska on our hands. They are human beings. Somehow or other they must live. They have come into this world and they are a part of the wards of this Nation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] may refer to Santa Claus as much as he pleases, but the United States of America owes the Eskimos the same debt that it owes any other ward of the Nation.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I have not the time. They owe the same debt to the Eskimos that they owe to any other helpless people of this Nation, and therefore we owe it to them to furnish them with a means of subsistence. The game supply and the other natural food supply of the Eskimos has been depleted. Therefore the least this Nation can do is to substitute for the natural food of the Eskimos these semidomesticated animals and enable them to have their own herds and make a living thereby. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am still trying to find out what this bill is all about. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'CONNELL] suggests that I should read the bill. I have read the bill. And if I did not think the Clerk is going to read it a little later, I would read it to the gentleman. I hope the gentleman will try to read it before the time comes for the bill's consideration. As I understand it, there are about 60,000 reindeer in private ownership in Alaska. That is what one of the gentlemen on the committee told us.

Mr. COLLINS. About 350,000.

Mr. TABER. The information that came from a member of the committee was about 50,000 to 60,000. There was a statement on the part of a representative of the Interior Department in the hearings 2 years ago that perhaps one-fifth of 500,000, or 100,000, might be in private ownership.

Mr. COLLINS. I just telephoned Mr. Burlew of the Interior Department and was advised that there are between five and seven hundred thousand deer in Alaska, and that there are between 200,000 and 350,000 of them in private ownership. This bill proposes not only the purchase of the reindeer but other property and rights in private ownership. The property of Mr. Baldwin, deceased, is being given to the Department.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I have been given to understand that these grazing rights are on Government lands. Why does the Government have to pay for grazing rights on its own property?

Mr. COLLINS. I was just told that the best grazing rights in Alaska are in private ownership.

Mr. SNELL. I was told by a member of the committee that practically all of it belonged to the Government.

Mr. COLLINS. I was just told over the telephone a few moments ago that the best grazing rights are in private ownership or under private control.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] is here, and he ought to know. Let us find out.

Mr. TABER. I do not believe they can answer it.

Mr. COLLINS. I have answered it.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alaska to answer that.

Mr. TABER. Very well; I yield.

Mr. DIMOND. In answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from New York, to the best of my knowledge and belief, none of the grazing rights of reindeer grazing grounds in Alaska is in private ownership, in the ordinary way in which we understand ownership. It is true that the private owners of deer have grazed their deer on the public domain, but I do not consider they have any right of ownership to the range and they have not any leases that I have ever heard of.

Mr. TABER. That is about what I understood.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the testimony of a man who is supposed to know something about this deer business, Mr. Gordon, who is head of the Reindeer Service in Alaska. What Mr. Gordon said before the Committee on Appropriations in December 1935 is this:

> There has never been any accurate count of the deer, but we understand there are in the neighborhood of 550,000, and about 20 percent of them are supposed of to be private ownership.

Now, I understand from what I believe to be reliable authority that the earmarked deer—that is, the ones that have had their ears clipped—total something like 60,000 and that the figure that the gentleman from the committee gave me is correct, according to the information I have from a private source, as to the number of earmarked deer. Those are probably about all that they can round up under this settlement and be able to actually prove belong to them.

Now, already they are in the business, through the superintendent of the Deer Service in Alaska, of taking care of the natives on this thing. For instance, they take care of the 26 native companies up there and look after their bookkeeping and accounting. Then there is a cold-storage outfit on the North Star, the ship that goes up there, that carries the natives' reindeer meat down where it can be marketed when there is a market for it. The gist of this thing was told by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] when he was on the floor. These people bought 1,200 reindeer back in 1914. Their operation has not been profitable. We do not have a fair appraisal submitted to the House by the committee showing the number of deer, anywhere near their value, the value of the plants for the purpose of sale, and that is all they are worth, because it is not a going, profitable concern; nor any reason why we should buy them, because already we have had testimony before the Interior Department Appropriations Committee that the Government is now, through Mr. Gordon, taking care of that marketing proposition for the natives and getting the meat down on the North Star in its refrigerated compartments.

Now, I wonder why it is that we have to consider such a bill as this. I wonder why it is that we should in any way have such a thing brought before us at this date in the session. I am willing to have bills brought before us that are absolutely necessary and for the passage of which there is a fair and intelligent reason given, but I am sorry in this particular case every bit of information we have obtained upon the bill we have had to obtain by pulling teeth. Instead of information being given by the committee, we had to pull teeth every time we got anything. I do not think that is a fair thing to expect of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I have always taken a very keen interest in Alaska, because from a modern military standpoint it is the one place in our country of greatest importance. Furthermore, Alaska has poured into the Treasury of the United States millions of dollars. It is one of our Territories that has been profitable to us financially. Naturally, therefore, I am interested in this bill. Reindeer furnishes both the food and the clothing for the Eskimos. Officials of the Interior Department have advised me that there are between 500,000 and 700,000 reindeer in Alaska; that between 200,000 and 350,000 of these reindeer are in private ownership. I have also been advised that the best grazing rights in Alaska are in private ownership or under private control.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COLLINS. I am sorry. I only have 3 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. You have touched on an important subject, and I think it ought to be cleared up.

Mr. COLLINS. If I had more time, I would be delighted to yield, because I have great respect and admiration for the gentleman from New York.

I also understand that certain packing plants, refrigeration plants, abbatoirs, and other activities must be purchased or built in order to render reindeer suitable for food and clothing for the Esquimo. If this bill passes inspectors from the Interior Department will go to Alaska and ascertain the value of the property in private ownership and when this investigation is made the Committee on Appropriations will be asked to appropriate only the amount fixed as proper and reasonable.

Mr. Ickes, of the Interior Department, is a conscientious public officer and will pay for this property no more than its real value. This is his past record. We can always trust him to safeguard the public interest.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Territories I have listened to all the evidence given in connection with this bill. The best informative testimony we heard as to the number of reindeer in Alaska was that there were somewhere between 600,000 and 700,000, about one-third of them being in private ownership. We also had testimony to the effect that these reindeer were raised largely on moss that grows less than one-quarter of an inch a year.

There is absolutely no regulation of the range at this time in Alaska and unless something is done to regulate it, to limit the herds of reindeer to a number that can properly be grazed, it is only a question of time when that is going to happen in Alaska which has happened to the great ranges of the West. I have some knowledge of the western ranges and I know what they suffered as a result of being overgrazed. That is what is taking place in Alaska.

This bill authorizes the appropriation of not to exceed $2,000,000 for the purchase not only of reindeer but of the equipment necessary to carry on that industry. Only so much of this amount will be used as is necessary.

There are between 18,000 and 20,000 Eskimos. For administrative purposes they are classified as Indians.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. I am going to vote for the bill, but to clear up a matter that is in my mind, we purchased Alaska in 1867. Have the deer increased in numbers since that time or have they decreased?

Mr. DEMPSEY. About 1,200 deer were brought into Alaska somewhere about 1900. That was the total number there at that time. There are today around 700,000, and they are increasing very rapidly.

Mr. BEITER. I can understand, then, why the grazing is becoming depleted.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I asked the gentleman to yield merely to point out to the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle who seem so confused about the bill that there is ample precedent for this type of legislation. The Canadian Government has passed legislation similar to this. They faced a similar situation in the case of the natives at the mouth of the Mackenzie River. They went over into Alaska and purchased from the private corporation, the Loman Brothers, a great herd of these reindeer, believing it offered the only solution to the native starvation problem at the mouth of the Mackenzie River. You all probably know and have read of the famous trek of Andrew Barr and his reindeer. Canada believed this to be a solution of the problem. So we have a precedent for such action.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In addition to listening to the testimony before our committee, I consulted two of the Senators who made a trip to Alaska to investigate this very activity and the conditions surrounding it. I refer to the senior Senator from North Dakota, Senator FRAZIER, and to the senior Senator from Oklahoma, Senator THOMAS. I do not believe there are two greater authorities on Indians and Indian affairs in the United States. They strongly advocated the passage of this measure. If we do not pass this bill, it means that we shall simply have to take care of some 18,000 or 20,000 Eskimos, or Indians, as they are classified.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Was it not as a result of their investigation last summer that this bill was introduced in the Senate and passed by that body?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I have great respect for the judgment of the gentleman from New Mexico and usually vote with him. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] raised a question, which was also alluded to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], as to whether or not a group of private owners were not about to unload these deer and all this property onto the Government. Whether this be true or not I do not know, but I certainly think it ought to be explained.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I can assure the gentleman that he has the wrong thought in mind; and I was present at every meeting of the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. It is not a matter of my belief; it is a matter that the gentleman from Oklahoma referred to, a reference which I think ought to be explained. I have an open mind on the bill, but the insinuation has been made that we are about to buy a white elephant from some corporation, and the facts should be given us.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman from Oklahoma is in error; that is not the fact. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Territories of the House considered the problems connected with this legislation with a great deal of caution. The main question of consideration before the committee was the protection of the Eskimos of Alaska in their main source of food supply. The reindeer to the Eskimo of Alaska is an important element in their domestic welfare. The deer supply food, clothing, and many other necessities pertaining to the life of the native. The subject under consideration is largely one of range management so as to make available the reindeer for the natives of the Territory of Alaska. As the members of the House undoubtedly know, the coming of the white man to the western and northwestern part of Alaska brought trouble and much disaster to the natives. The source of food supply both by sea and land was materially depleted and in many localities practically exterminated. About the year 1890 the Eskimos, for the reasons mentioned, were faced with starvation and in order to save them 1,280 reindeer were imported from Siberia, between the years 1892 and 1902. Western Alaska proved a good environment for reindeer and at the present time the number is in the neighborhood of 600,000. That portion of Alaska in which the Eskimo settlements are located is in the environment most applicable as a range for the deer. Grazing in the locality is only suitable for reindeer which is the only substantial source of livelihood for the natives. Reindeer, with the exception of the native caribou, is the only animal that is able to survive on the lichens or reindeer moss found in such climates. Some 15,000 coastal-dwelling Eskimos live in this portion of Alaska which is suitable for the propagation of the reindeer.

The security of the Eskimo and his dependency upon the reindeer is threatened by nonnative ownership of deer and by nonnative occupation and control of the range. In the year 1914 white men first entered the reindeer business and at the present time approximately one-third of the reindeer in Alaska is owned by others than natives and on ranges important to the Eskimos the percentage is higher. Those ranges which are most attractive to nonnative owners invariably coincide or overlap ranges essential to the welfare of the native Eskimo. It is absolutely necessary that the Eskimos graze their herds of reindeer within a reasonable distance of their settlements. I have been advised that from 30 to 60 acres of grazing land are required for 1 deer and therefore a controversy of interests between native and white deer raisers on the same range results in overgrazing. Once a range is depleted of its forage it takes from 15 to 40 years to make it again productive of reindeer moss. Many places near the coast the reindeer moss has disappeared.

When the reindeer was first introduced into Alaska the herds doubled in size in 3 years, but at the present time, through overgrazing, the increase has been greatly reduced. Bitter conflicts between Eskimo and white reindeer owners have grown out of the mixing of herds, and these conflicts threatened irreparable damage to the entire future life of the Eskimo. The Committee on the Territories, after serious consideration and deliberation pertaining to the problem, with the welfare of the Eskimo of Alaska as their chief objective, arrived at the conclusion that only one solution was practicable, and that solution is set out in the bill under consideration for the purchase by the Government of all non-native-owned reindeer and such reindeer range equipment as may be useful and the distribution of the same among the Eskimo or the holding of such reindeer and other property by the Government in trust for the use of the natives. With the permanent elimination on the nonnative owners the problem should be comparatively simple, for then the deer can be distributed and ranges allocated in a manner satisfactory to the Eskimo.

The natives of Alaska, including the Eskimo, are held to have practically the same status as the Indians of the United States. The Federal Government has recognized this responsibility. It is likewise the responsibility of the Federal Government to protect and look after the social and future economic welfare of these natives.

As to whether or not $2,000,000 is the amount that will be required, I am not prepared to state. It appears from the best testimony that the committee could obtain, as heretofore stated, that there are approximately 600,000 reindeer, of which about one-third is in private ownership.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. How did the gentleman determine that? The Delegate from Alaska said there was no way of determining that.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is based upon the best estimate and testimony we have.

In order to establish the economic security and relieve the great distress of the Eskimo localities dependent upon the raising and use of reindeer and the sale of surplus reindeer, I am of the firm opinion that it will be necessary to purchase the non-native-owned reindeer and such reindeer range and equipment and give the Secretary of the Interior sufficient authority in the operation of the reindeer industry to administer it to the best interest of the natives of Alaska.

I believe that it is important that this legislation be passed and that the amount set out in the bill be given to the Interior Department in order that the Eskimo of Alaska may be adequately protected in this industry, in which both their social and future economic welfare largely depends.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, this is not a surprise bill. A similar bill was before the Congress at the last session, and I distinctly recall a considerable discussion of the subject took place before a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee having charge of the Interior Department appropriation bill when it had under consideration the appropriation for the fiscal year 1937. Extensive hearings were had upon this bill by the Committee on Territories, and that committee fully and adequately considered the matter.

The question arises as to how we are going to determine what deer are to be bought and how many there are. In spite of the conflicting estimates that have been made, Mr. Chairman, to the best of my knowledge, the number of deer in private ownership amounts to approximately 200,000. It is true they are not all marked. It is impossible to corral every deer in Alaska. But, in considering this matter I rely upon the known integrity and the outstanding ability of the Secretary of the Interior. I rely upon the fact known to every man in this House that the Secretary of the Interior is not going to give any man $1 of Government funds for any property that the man is not entitled to. Estimates may be made as to the number of deer to be bought, but anyone who knows Secretary Ickes realizes he is not going to give away Government money to any man who is not entitled to it. We might as well put that out of our mind entirely, because there is not anything to it. It is a kind of a smoke screen. The purchase of the deer is one of the difficulties that must be encountered, but it is a difficulty that can be overcome.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Is it the purpose of this appropriation to buy reindeer, or is it the purpose to buy cold-storage houses and equipment?

Mr. DIMOND. The purpose of the bill is to buy not only reindeer but such cold-storage houses, corrals, and other equipment as will be necessary for the use of the natives in carrying out this industry. We all know that the Secretary of the Interior does not intend to go out and buy up everything in sight, whether it is useful or valuable or not. I believe we may rely upon the good sense and the business acumen, as well as the integrity, of the Secretary of the Interior, in whom I have the utmost confidence.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. MILLS. Is it not a fact if we purchase these reindeer it is similar to resettlement projects in the United States.

Mr. DIMOND. Yes, indeed, and I thank the gentleman for the contribution.

Mr. Chairman, it is stated that charity begins at home. It does. We passed a bill the other day that will require ultimately hundreds of millions of dollars for a farm-tenancy program. That was a good bill. You passed another bill which will take hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars for housing, largely in the great cities of the country, which was also a good bill.

Mr. Chairman, I wish the Members knew these people up there in Alaska as I know them. They are citizens of the United States just as we are citizens of the United States. They are human beings. In the sight of God and man, I believe they are just as good, just as upright, and just as generous, and as much animated with a spirit of the good Samaritan as any Member who sits in either House of Congress. [Applause.] They are wonderful people. They are scattered all over a territory which contains thousands of square miles. I am not coming in here to ask you to take care of them today or tomorrow. I am asking you to assist them in setting up a system which will enable them to take care of themselves and their children for the next hundred years. It is the wise and far-seeing thing to do. We are not just appropriating money to buy food for them. We are setting up a business establishment that they can operate and their children can operate after them.

Mr. Chairman, I am asking the Congress to do now the thing that should have been done in 1890 when the deer were brought to Alaska in the first place, and it would not have cost a cent then.

Mr. Chairman, it has been intimated that this is a grab of some kind, and that we are going to pay the Lomens a lot of money, and that there is something wrong with this bill. It is the last thing in my mind to give Government money to anybody who does not deserve it. For me there is irony in all this, for if this bill is passed and if the deer are bought, the money in part at least will go to these very men of the Lomen corporations who spent money in the last election in an effort to defeat me, and if they get money from this bill, and if I am a candidate in the next election, they will probably spend more money in the next election to try to defeat me. My own selfish interests would lead me to oppose the bill, but my duty to the native citizens compels me to support it.

Mr. Chairman, we are doing this for the natives of Alaska and I hope nobody will be influenced by the fact that in helping the natives it is necessary to give money in the form of a purchase price for property that belongs to somebody else. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is satisfied this legislation will safeguard the interests of these 18,000 Eskimos to such an extent it will not be necessary for the Government to feed them or provide for them in the future?

Mr. DIMOND. I am satisfied this is going to be of marked help to the Eskimos and other Alaska natives, and that we will never have to come back here again and ask any relief for the natives who participate in the reindeer industry. May I repeat: This bill is for the benefit of the natives of Alaska, not for the benefit of the Lomens or other white men. We owe the white men nothing. We are under strong moral obligations to help the natives when they need help. They are deserving of aid in their endeavor to establish a self-sustaining business or industry. If you knew them as I know them, you would not hesitate; you would pass the bill and make the appropriation. Of course, I realize that much—in fact everything—depends upon good and wise administration. It is not enough that the administrative officials intend well. They must do the right thing in the right way. The bill is not perfect, but it contains much that is good and I am hopeful this House will see fit to adopt amendments which I shall offer later, and which will bring it nearer to perfection. The natives can run this business if they have a fair start and a fair opportunity. That is all they need. This manner of helping people is a thousand times better than relief, for by this method you are helping them to help themselves. I wish that we had before us the bill as I introduced it in the House, but I suppose that no Member of Congress ever secures the passage of a bill in the precise form in which he desires it, for men disagree upon questions of policy and matters of form, and upon everything else. I am compelled to take the best bill I can get, and this bill contains so much good that I earnestly urge your support of it, and that you support the amendments which I shall offer a little later.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a necessity for providing means of subsistence for the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska is hereby declared to exist. It is also declared to be the policy of Congress, and the purpose of this act, to establish and maintain for the said natives of Alaska a self-sustaining economy by acquiring and organizing for and on behalf of said natives a reindeer industry or business, by encouraging and developing native activity and responsibility in all branches of the said industry or business, and by preserving the native character of the said industry or business thus established.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the remarks just made by the very able Delegate from Alaska. The gentleman stated there are approximately 18,000 Eskimos, and that under this bill we are to buy several hundred thousand reindeer to make these Eskimos prosperous, so they will not need further assistance from the United States. I tell you the United States Government can support out of the Treasury of the United States all these Eskimos in Alaska much more cheaply than it can hope to do by engaging in this new industry.

Remember, if this bill goes through and they get the money from the Committee on Appropriations, the Federal Government is going to take over the reindeer industry in Alaska. We are going to open up slaughterhouses, we are going to have cold-storage plants, we are going to have cold-storage ships, we are going to have to prepare and process meat, we are going to have to find a market, we are going to have to herd the reindeer, and we are going to have to look after them. The taxpayers must pay for all of this.

You can say, "Why, the Eskimos are going to do this." Well, I have been up there, and some of you have, and I should like to see an Eskimo doing anything other than what he is doing now. He may be able to herd these reindeer if he is told how, but he is not going to process them, he is not going to operate the plants. The cost is going to fall on this Government. Another army of employees and agents will go on the pay roll. We are setting up in Alaska an industry which, if it does succeed, must replace just so much of the products of the farm in the United States.

Why, you cattlemen, you men of the southwestern country, like my good friend the gentleman from New Mexico, whom I respect and whom I generally follow, and who is on this committee, think of what this bill means. What are the gentleman's cattlemen going to do when the United States Government of its own volition and with the taxpayers' money sets up a reindeer industry in Alaska to grow reindeer, process reindeer, and bring reindeer meat to take the place of meat in the United States?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. In just a minute, when I am through. I appreciate that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] is one of the leaders in Congress who is always fighting for the interests of the cattle raisers, and I feel sure that he is opposed to any legislation that is not beneficial to the cattlemen of the Southwest. This reindeer meat will not be purchased and therefore it will not compete in the end, consequently the Government must lose.

The Government will sell the reindeer meat in the United States in competition with the products we grow here. If the reindeer industry had been profitable, this bill would not be here. The corporation owned by the Lowman interests entered upon this venture because it looked as if it would make money, and the venture partly succeeded. It succeeded to the extent that it was determined that you can grow reindeer on the moss up there in Alaska and the reindeer increase like rabbits. There are so many of them they do not know what to do with them. When it comes to getting a financial return from the reindeer, however, they find they cannot sell the meat. It cannot be sold in competition with American meat. So the venture is a financial failure, and it being a failure, they want the United States Government to take it over, as is usual, and to operate the failure in the name of caring for these poor Eskimos up there—18,000 of them. If the Eskimos are hungry and if they need assistance, they are citizens and let us have the courage to give them assistance; but let us not subsidize a commercial venture when we know that even if we gave the reindeer to these people and if they could process the reindeer themselves they could not operate more economically and more efficiently than has the Lowman interests. This is a bill to sell a bankrupt industry to Uncle Sam. The Eskimo is not the main consideration.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I read this bill a few moments ago, and have been thinking seriously about two particular paragraphs in the bill. You are attempting to help these natives, but they cannot operate without these corrals and slaughterhouses and, unless they are incorporated in some way or some large associations formed. We have had experience in granting to natives certain rights and leases to enable them to carry on. They have had to organize and issue stock to their members. You have endeavored in this bill to say that a native cannot transfer, devise, or dispose his stock to any person or corporation except to a native or a native corporation. Of course you have tried in every way to keep the native idea in the bill.

Are these Eskimos so able that they can carry on a business of this character? We have found that even our own people, who have been granted exclusive rights, have been forced to submit and subject themselves to outside control, which, by lease or agreements which overcame the law, and have actually secured control of said business and taken the profits.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman hardly ever speaks, and it seems to me the Committee should maintain better order.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman hardly ever speaks! I wish I could look into the gentleman's mind and know exactly what he intended to convey by that remark. I do not know him well enough to judge him. If I can be helpful to the bill, I should keep on speaking. I am simply trying to express a thought which is running through my mind, for I am hopeful that we may safeguard this industry for the natives of Alaska.

The Delegate from Alaska states that the housing bill is good, the farm tenancy bill is good, and I presume he feels that the Treasury is inexhaustible. But we have no money to pay for such things.

I hope these few Eskimos in Alaska will prove able to justify this expenditure. Probably only a few of them will be successful in making it a successful business venture. But we should be watchful, despite the confidence placed in the Secretary of the Interior by the Delegate from Alaska, that outsiders, after they sell to the Government, do not find a way to creep in and control and take the profits from the stock ownership of these natives. If this does not occur, it will be something different from what has been experienced with the natives on the soil of the United States itself, from my own observation.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. DIMOND. May I invite the gentleman's attention to the provisions of the bill which, in my judgment, which is not so important, but also in the judgment of people who are skilled in the interpretation of statutes, will prevent that.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have read that provision carefully twice, and it has aroused my interest and suspicion.

I must close by saying that while I do not know how large these families may be, I do think $2,000,000 for 17,000 or 18,000 people is quite large, especially when only a small proportion of the heads of these families are going to make a success of the business. I am wondering if some sort of pension could not be granted each family so there would be some certainty about taking care of these Eskimos, and would not that be much cheaper in the end than following this method of forcing them into business? How many times have I declared that there are many persons, even among our own people, who cannot somehow successfully carry on, no matter how much you may try to help them by setting them up in actual business. Many people simply cannot do business. We certainly can and should ameliorate their condition, but we should move slowly in this matter of actual capital grants for such experimentation.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, to acquire, in the name of the United States, by purchase or other lawful means, including exercise of the power of eminent domain, for and on behalf of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska, reindeer, reindeer-range equipment, abattoirs, cold-storage plants, warehouses, and other property, real or personal, the acquisition of which he determines to be necessary to the effectuation of the purposes of this act. Any condemnation proceedings undertaken by virtue of the authority granted in this section shall conform, as nearly as may be, to the procedure provided for the condemnation of real estate by the act of August 1, 1888 (ch. 728), or to that provided by the act of February 26, 1931 (ch. 307).

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 17, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize the Secretary of the Interior to consolidate native-owned herds of reindeer with herds owned by others than natives prior to the purchase or acquisition of such herds of others than natives."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. All persons, other than natives of Alaska, who upon the date of this enactment claim title to any Alaskan reindeer shall, within 1 year after the date of this enactment, file in Alaska, with the duly authorized agent or agents of the Secretary of the Interior, declarations of their ownership. Similar declarations concerning Alaskan reindeer acquired by any person not a native of Alaska by purchase or by gift at any time after the date of this enactment shall be filed as aforesaid within 30 days after the date of such acquisition. Records of all declarations thus filed shall be made and kept open to public inspection in Alaska. If any owner of Alaskan reindeer, to whom the foregoing provisions of this section are applicable, shall fail to file the required declaration within the stated period, he shall be barred thereafter from asserting his claim of title.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to receive, in the name of the United States, for and on behalf of said natives of Alaska, gifts made for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to receive and expend, for the purposes of this act, properly authorized loans, grants, or allocations made to him for said purposes by Federal agencies.

SEC. 6. Except as herein otherwise specially provided, none of the moneys collected or received by the Secretary of the Interior in his administration of this act shall be paid into the Treasury, but all such moneys shall constitute a revolving fund to be administered by the Secretary of the Interior for the purposes of this act.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with down to section 12, on page 12.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I was seeking recognition in order to move to strike out section 6 at this time, and I do not want to be precluded from offering the amendment which I am afraid would happen if I agreed to the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 3, line 20, strike out all of section 6.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment to strike out the section relating to revolving funds.

I do not think we ought to provide a revolving fund. I think the Secretary of the Interior ought to come in, under the regular Interior appropriation bill, and justify his appropriation.

I do want to say one other thing now with reference to the bill. It appears that every bit of this grazing land is in Government ownership. This is the statement of the Delegate from Alaska. It is under Government control, and everything that is needed to do to maintain this grazing land for the Eskimo is for the Government, by law or otherwise, to establish a regulation so that only the Eskimo can have this privilege. There is not any sense at all in going through all this rigmarole and spending all this money to accomplish something that can be done in a very simple way.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It occurs to me that under the language of section 6 there will be no occasion for the Committee on Appropriations to pass upon these expenditures because this section provides that the rents, and so forth, shall go to the Interior Department and may be used to pay these expenses.

Mr. TABER. That is correct; without the Appropriations Committee or the Congress having anything to say about it or knowing how the money is used.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. If we do this to help out the Eskimos and the natives, why not buy the reindeer, give them to the Eskimos or the natives, and let them use Government property, and end it there?

Mr. TABER. That would be better than to have this rigmarole going on, because they have now, according to the testimony, a method of marketing all the stuff there is any demand for.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York would practically emasculate the bill. The amendment would destroy, in a measure, the very foundations of the plan which is sought to be followed by the passage of the bill.

I point to a precedent for this, and that precedent lies in the operation of the Alaska Railroad. How could the Alaska Railroad be operated if every dollar paid in for fares or for freight went into the Treasury and then two or three or four times a year it would be necessary to get an appropriation from Congress to get any money?

Mr. Chairman, I understand that some Members are opposed to the bill, and of course in order to defeat it or to render it useless, it would be a part of their plan to tear it apart one piece at a time, so that in the end, if we did pass the bill, we would have nothing. This is a vital and important part of the bill, because the money that comes in would be available to be used over and over, so that it would not be necessary to come to Congress every few months to get additional funds. This is the scientific way to do it, the businesslike way to do it, the way any corporation or good businessman would do it. He would keep his money where he could use it from time to time as needed.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And if this amendment were agreed to, would it be possible for the Secretary of the Interior to perform under the bill at all?

Mr. DIMOND. To answer the gentleman's question I should say that the only thing it would do would be to kill the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 16, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to organize and manage the reindeer industry or business provided for by this act in such manner as to establish and maintain for said natives of Alaska a complete and self-sustaining economy and to encourage and develop the activity and responsibility of said natives in all branches of said industry or business.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 2, strike out the words "and directed"; and in lines 3, 4, and 5, strike out the words "to establish and maintain for said natives of Alaska a complete and."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have already called attention to the possible failure of results contemplated in section 8, and I cannot let the opportunity pass without calling attention to the language in section 7, which I will attempt to amend by striking out. The Secretary of the Interior is absolutely instructed to do an impossible thing. To establish and maintain a complete and self-sustaining economy. He must build these slaughter houses and corrals, of course, because the natives must have these necessities, but to order him to spend any amount of money to bring about a complete and self-sustaining economy among people where it is undoubtedly impossible of such accomplishment, is really a declaration that I cannot believe gentlemen on the majority side would wish to remain in the bill. Is it not enough to authorize him to do all things necessary to attempt the bringing about of this economy? To instruct him to carry on until he forces them to maintain such a complete economy seems to me beyond all reason.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I know little about this particular bill, but it is very evident that it is just another step toward state socialism and paternalism in government. Before we vote on it I rise to call attention to the fiscal situation of the United States Government. The day is soon coming when we will have to pay very serious attention to expenditures out of the Federal Treasury. The late Senator Robinson in one of the last speeches he made said that it may strike some people as humorous to refer to the deficit in the United States Treasury but that he was unable to see anything funny about it.

Only today we have received a veto message from the President of the United States declining to build a marine hospital for sick and disabled sailors and ex-service men of the United States. The reason he gave was the condition of the Treasury. The President has indicated, Mr. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board has indicated, and Mr. Morgenthau has indicated that in their opinion the day has come when we have got to stop spending these millions of dollars. If we cannot afford to build a hospital for the sick and disabled soldiers and sailors, I doubt whether we should go into this business of paternalism up at the North Pole. The President had hoped to come within $400,000,000 of balancing the Budget this year. A month and a half of this fiscal year has passed, and we are rapidly approaching that amount of deficit now. We have gone into the red over $100,000,000 more since the 1st of last July than we did for the same period a year ago. We are going into the red now at the rate of $4,500 a minute in the eighth year of consecutive deficits in this Government. The public debt exceeds $37,000,000,000 at this time and is still increasing nearly $5,000 a minute. If the President will show an inflexible position to bring the Budget into actual balance, he is going to have full support from me now and during the next session of Congress. It is time to stop spending these millions of dollars on paternalism and state socialism. We must begin to live within our income. Disaster threatens if we do not. We cannot expect our children to pay for runing their government and ours besides. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is one of the most constructive and humane pieces of legislation that the Congress can pass in relation to our native wards of Alaska. I agree, as a general rule, with the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], who just preceded me, but we are considering the natives of Alaska, which is a Territory of our country, with reference to whom we have a special responsibility. Certainly none of us want to see conditions exist in Alaska that have existed with reference to the American Indians. A disgrace in the pages of American history has been the manner in which we have in the past allowed the American Indian, a ward of our country, to be capitalized and exploited.

The Alaskan native is in the same situation. They are wards of the Federal Government. The purpose of this bill is to protect our wards in Alaska and to prevent the scandalous situation existing in the future with reference to Alaska that the pages of American history are filled with in relation to the American Indian.

I hope this bill passes as recommended by the committee. It has been well thought out. The report of the committee is a powerful document.

I rose particularly to give some information to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who asked a very pertinent question earlier in the debate about the corporation that is involved.

I have made some inquiries and tried to get some information about it for my own benefit in voting upon any amendments that might be offered to the bill in connection with that corporation. I have been informed that some years ago the two Baldwin brothers of New York went up to Alaska and became interested in trying to assist the Alaskan natives by developing a business up there in connection with the raising of reindeer and in connection with the grazing and other activities related thereto. The information I got is that they made an investment of about two and one-half million dollars. One of the brothers died 3 or 4 years ago. The other brother is living. That brother wants to liquidate the corporation and cooperate with the Government, if this bill passes. All he is seeking, as I understand, is enough to pay off the debts of the corporation. He is willing to give his interest, approximately $900,000, to the Government. For the past several months the Government has had auditors going over the books of the corporation and they have also had appraisers up there.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. More than a year ago he made a proposition to the Government to give his entire stock to the Government if he would accept it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understand the gentleman is going to give his interest to the Government today. That was told to me less than 15 minutes ago by a reliable authority. However, the gentleman cannot give what he does not own. He cannot give the interest of the other stockholders. He cannot give the interest of creditors. The Department will make the best bargain possible, and with the sterling honesty of Secretary Ickes we can be assured that the Governments interests will be protected. The Appropriations Committee must look into it and they must make the appropriation after the Bureau of the Budget has also done so. That, in my opinion, is a satisfactory explanation of the involvement of the corporation in this bill.

The bill is a humane bill and I hope it will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

There being no objection the Clerk again reported the Gifford amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent at this time that the bill be considered as read down to section 12.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to distribute the reindeer and other property acquired by the United States under this act among the Eskimos or other natives of Alaska, or to corporations, associations, or organizations of said natives, either in the form of gifts or under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and to execute and deliver appropriate instruments of title, or to hold and use the same in trust for the use and benefit of said natives, with a view of effecting the widest possible distribution of such reindeer and other property among those natives of Alaska who are in need thereof and who can make proper use of the same. The Secretary of the Interior may from time to time, in such manner as he determines to be proper for effectuating the purposes of this act, distribute among those of said natives, or corporations, associations, or other organizations of said natives, who are engaged in said industry or business or for whose subsistence reindeer are necessary, whatever profits may be earned by that part of the industry or business which is owned by the United States and which may, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, be distributed in accordance with sound business practice.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, the reason I objected was because I thought there was going to be an amendment offered and I would not get an opportunity to make a few timely remarks.

I want to call attention to the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] a few moments ago with reference to the statement of the President in regard to economy. It seems to be forgotten, however. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] told you, and told you truthfully, that the amount of expenses this year over and above what it was last year is about $5,000 a minute. This is a bad, bad situation and must be remedied at once. I want to call your attention to a statement made by the Secretary of the Interior in this report, in the last paragraph:

The Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget on May 1 informs me that the proposed legislation, either in its present form or if amended as suggested in this report, would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

Now, if this bill as it is before you this afternoon, as given to you by the Secretary of the Interior, is not in accordance with the views of the President of the United States, if you are going to permit this Santa Claus bill to be put into law this afternoon when you are going $5,000 a minute into debt faster than you did a year ago, and last year you went into the red over $3,000,000,000, where are you going to get the money? Oh, Members of Congress, you talk economy and probably will talk economy to your constituents back home, but they should not be fooled and can look up your record for voting on these enormous expenses at this session of Congress. Why we have appropriated over $9,000,000,000 already at this session and next year you remember this: You will have a deficit of $2,000,000,000 notwithstanding the fact the President promised the country a balanced Budget. It was only another of his promises—it will never happen.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] certainly recognizes this fact, and I hope that the other Members of this Congress will soon come to the conclusion that this is only a Santa Claus bill for this corporation. It should be voted down, and at least save $2,000,000.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant, in his discretion and subject to such terms as he may impose, to any corporations, associations, or other organizations of said natives any or all of the powers relating to the administration of the reindeer industry or business herein provided for, upon a finding by him as to each grant that it is in the interests of the said natives of Alaska and will serve the purposes of this act.

SEC. 10. Live reindeer in Alaska, and the increase thereof, acquired by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to this act, and live reindeer in Alaska, and the increase thereof, owned by the said natives of Alaska or corporations, associations, or other organizations of said natives, however acquired, shall not be sold or transferred, by descent, devise, or in any other manner whatsoever, to anyone other than the said natives of Alaska, the United States for and on behalf of said natives, or corporations, associations, or other organizations of said natives, except with the consent in writing of the Secretary of the Interior or his duly authorized agent, stating that such consent is given upon the condition that the reindeer, and any increase thereof, sold or otherwise transferred with said consent, shall either be butchered in the Territory of Alaska within 30 days or shipped out of said Territory and never brought back alive into said Territory. Sales or other transfers of said reindeer, if made without the consent in writing herein required, or, although made with said consent, if followed by failure to comply with the condition therein required, shall be null and void, and shall not pass any title to or right to possession of any reindeer or increase thereof. No stock or other interest in any corporation, association, or other organization of said natives, engaged in or organized for the purpose of engaging in the reindeer industry or business, shall be transferred, by descent, devise, or in any other manner whatsoever, to anyone other than said natives of Alaska, the United States for and on behalf of said natives, or corporations, associations, or other organizations of said natives. Any willful violation of the provisions of this section of this act by any vendee or other transferee shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500: Provided, That no title to any reindeer, or reindeer products, owned by the United States for and on behalf of the said natives of Alaska, nor any title to reindeer, or reindeer products, owned by any of said natives or said corporations, associations, or other organizations of said natives, nor any stock or other interest in said corporations, associations, or other organizations of said natives, shall be transferred by descent, devise, or in any other manner whatsoever, except pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior for the purposes of preserving the native character of the reindeer industry or business in Alaska and effectuating the other purposes of this act: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any native of Alaska who owns reindeer or any interest therein through stock ownership, or otherwise, in any corporation or association or other organization owning reindeer, from transferring his reindeer, or any interest therein, to his children or other native relatives by gift, sale, devise, or bequest, or prevent the same from being so transferred or passed by descent.

SEC. 11. "Reindeer" as used in this act shall be understood to include reindeer and such caribou as have been introduced into animal husbandry or have actually joined reindeer herds, and the increase thereof.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill on fundamental principles. I live in the Ohio and Mississippi Valley that was flooded. I cannot understand why this Congress would make a gift to the Eskimos in Alaska when there is no provision in the law whereby a farmer in the flooded area of the United States, or a "dust bowl", can receive even a cow or a mule from the National Government.

They said to me when I went down to the Government departments for aid after my people had had all their property destroyed, their cattle and their mules—the last mule drowned: They said to me, "All we can do for you is to lend you money." That is what they say to you of the "dust bowl" when the last cow has died: "All we can do is to lend you money."

There is no provision in our law whereby the Government can make outright grants to the citizens of this Nation, and, of course, we should give special grants to the Eskimos.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is well aware of the fact that in the Interior Department appropriation bill we gave the Eskimos of Alaska everything they requested.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. I understand we provide schools for these people. I am sympathetic with these people, I want to take care of them; but I do not want to give them more than we give to our own citizens here in the United States, and I am not going to support any measure that carries a provision of this kind.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I doubt whether there is a Member of Congress who has not received in the last few days telegrams telling them that the young men of this country who have been assisted by the National Youth Administration will not receive the assistance this year that they received last year to complete their education due to the fact that the appropriation was reduced. If we have $2,000,000 to spare, would it not be better to apply it toward educating the youth of this country rather than for this purpose?

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Why, certainly. This bill provides that we give to these Eskimos this money; not only that, but you are putting the Government into the cold-storage business in Alaska, buying a plant from a corporation that is bankrupt. I say that it is fundamentally wrong to give a grant to these people without any obligation on their part at all, because we do not do it for our own people in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that we are going a long, long way if we appropriate $2,000,000 and give it to these people. For God's sake, do not put the Government in business in Alaska, where we will have to support it during all the years to come. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, to begin with, I admit that I do not know a great deal about this particular piece of legislation, for I have just given it casual study since I came on the floor; but I thought that I learned some 35 years ago that there was no Santa Claus. I have, however, about come to the conclusion now, after listening to the proponents of this bill, that I was entirely in error and that there is a Santa Claus after all. This bill has been properly named "the Santa Claus bill." Uncle Sam has become Santa Claus and will furnish reindeer to the Eskimos.

I know it is a fine thing for the Government to buy $2,000,000 worth of reindeer and give them to the Eskimos or somebody else. It is very Utopian. It might be a fine thing for the Government to go down in the South Seas, catch all the turtles and turn them over to the Filipinos or somebody else. It might be a fine thing for the Government to go out into the Rocky Mountains, catch all the wild billy goats and turn them over to somebody who needed them. But since the precarious condition of the United States Treasury has been pointed out so recently on the floor of this House, I do not see how we are going to support this legislation.

If you set this precedent another proposition will be brought in to you, and so on it will go.

I do not know what is back of this. I am not charging that anything is back of it. It is being rumored about on the floor that some private industry went into this business, did not make a success of it, and now they want to sell these reindeer to the Government. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I do know that under section 7 of this bill it is proposed to put the United States Government in the reindeer business. You will set up another department filled with high-salaried employees. The reindeer bureau will be set up here in Washington and you will be paying for it for the next 150 years.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this bill will be defeated. It is ludicrous; it is wrong.

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as, in his judgment, are necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: Page 7, line 21, after the period, insert the following:

"Prior to the promulgation of any such rules and regulations the Secretary of the Interior shall endeavor to ascertain the views of the natives of Alaska who may be affected thereby as to the nature of the rules and regulations desirable for making effective the provisions of this act, and to that end the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to divide those parts of the Territory of Alaska used in carrying on the reindeer industry into reindeer districts, having regard to the convenience of those engaged in the industry; and thereupon and from time to time thereafter as often as the Secretary of the Interior may deem it necessary, the Secretary may with respect to each of said districts call a district meeting of those natives residing in the district who own reindeer located in the district, and at such meeting or meetings the said natives may draw up and adopt by majority vote of the native owners present and voting, proposed rules and regulations for such district, or revisions thereof, or amendments thereto, relative to grazing and use of the range as well as to round-ups, marking, butchering, shipping, packing, storage, and sale. The proposed rules and regulations, or revisions thereof, or amendments thereto, so agreed upon by the native reindeer owners for such district shall be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior for his consideration, and upon approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior may be incorporated in the rules and regulations effective in the district where applicable. Each district meeting shall be presided over by the local representative of the Secretary of the Interior if there be one, otherwise by a native reindeer owner selected by the other owners attending the meeting."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane. This is a bill to give the Government and the Secretary of the Interior a certain layout. The amendment proposes to have a sort of a code, or something of that character, with reference to the management of individual Indians' or Eskimos' affairs in connection with this reindeer operation. The amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the amendment is germane. Section 12 provides that—

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as, in his judgment, are necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

The proposed amendment merely provides that prior to the making and promulgation of such rules and regulations, the Secretary of the Interior shall consult with the natives affected and endeavor to ascertain their wishes. It does not take away any power conferred by the act upon the Secretary of the Interior. It is intensely and intimately related to the provisions of section 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Section 12 of the bill reads:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as, in his judgment, are necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] is germane, and therefore the point of order is overruled.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

May I say to the Members of the House this amendment was offered in committee and it was voted down. We are placing a responsibility, if this bill becomes law, on the Secretary of the Interior to do certain things. If this amendment is agreed to you are tying him up so that he cannot organize or execute this order without consulting with about everybody in the Territory of Alaska. I think it was unanimously felt by the committee that the amendment should not be agreed to and I oppose it for that reason.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The committee felt this would be contrary to the purposes of the bill and would tie the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, making it impossible for him to do the very thing that we want him to do under this act?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Absolutely.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe some of the Members are under a misapprehension as to the scope of the section. I have in my hand copy of a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, in which, it is true, the Acting Secretary opposes having placed in the bill substantially the thing that I seek to accomplish by the amendment I have offered, but he says that he intends to do this thing, anyhow. That is, he intends to consult the natives before making and promulgating the rules and regulations.

Mr. Chairman, after all, these people ought to be consulted before rules and regulations are made up. There is nothing unfair in that. All we seek to do is to require the Secretary, before he makes rules and regulations, to consult with the Eskimos or the organizations of Eskimos and determine what they want in the way of rules and regulations. At the end of that time he may make such rules and regulations as he thinks are proper. This is in line with democratic government everywhere. These people are intelligent. Let us trust them.

I am seeking to provide by law in this amendment precisely what the Secretary says he is going to do, anyhow. It is true I have the utmost confidence in Secretary Ickes; but, after all, he will not occupy that office forever, and I want to have some assurance that rules and regulations will not be adopted and put in force on people 5,000 miles from Washington before they know anything about it or have an opportunity to say what should be done. They ought to be consulted first, and in the bill I introduced that was provided; that is to say, the natives were given an opportunity to meet and draw up rules and regulations to be submitted to the Secretary. That is what ought to be done, and why should anyone oppose it?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the House to the fact that the Committee turned this amendment down. The amendment reads in part as follows:

And at such meeting or meetings the said natives may draw up and adopt by majority vote of the native owners present and voting, proposed rules and regulations for such district, or revision thereof, or amendments thereto, relative to grazing and the use of the range as well as to round-up, marking, butchering, shipping, packing, storage, and sale.

If you will read section 13 of the bill you will find that section 13 gives the Secretary the power to regulate and control all round-ups, handlings, marking, and butcherings of reindeer upon said public land. The power given to the Secretary covers the gentleman's amendment. The only difference is that they do not go out and have these meetings and permit the Eskimos to do the things which the Secretary should have the power to do.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee votes down the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: Page 7, after line 21, insert a new section to be known as section 13, to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. Whenever, in his judgment, it is practicable and to the best interests of the natives the Secretary shall appoint natives to the supervisory and other positions in the administration of such reindeer industry or business."

And renumber following sections consecutively.

Mr. GREEN. There is no objection to this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. In order to coordinate with the use of public lands in Alaska for grazing reindeer with the purposes of this act, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to regulate the grazing of reindeer upon said lands. He may, in his discretion, define reindeer ranges and regulate the use thereof for grazing reindeer; issue grazing permits; regulate and control all round-ups, handlings, marking, and butcherings of reindeer upon said public lands; and may issue rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this section of this act. Any person who willfully violates any of the rules and regulations promulgated for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this section of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 1 year or by a fine of not more than $500.

SEC. 14. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to fix fees to be paid by owners of reindeer for such grazing permits as may be required and issued in the administration of the preceding section of this act. All money received on account of such fees shall be administered as provided in section 6 of this act.

SEC. 15. The term "natives of Alaska" as used herein shall be deemed to mean the native Indians, Eskimos, and Aleuts of whole or part blood inhabiting Alaska at the time of the Treaty of Cession of Alaska to the United States and their descendants of whole or part blood, together with the Indians and Eskimos who, since the year 1867 and prior to the enactment hereof, have migrated into Alaska from the Dominion of Canada, and their descendants of the whole or part blood.

SEC. 16. All of the power and authority exercised by the Secretary of the Interior hereunder shall be so exercised through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the latter shall have general supervision of all matters concerning the reindeer industry in Alaska, subject always to the control and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in order that, for the benefit and welfare of the natives of Alaska, the administration of this act shall be correlated with the administration of the laws relating to the education, medical relief, and health of the natives of Alaska.

SEC. 17. The sum of $2,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the use of the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 18. All acts of Congress or parts thereof which are inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. GREEN (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill may be considered as read.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that if this bill is important enough to be brought in here to take up the time of the House on the closing day, and there is no more important business than this to be brought up, enough time should be taken to read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 8, beginning with line 12, strike out all of section 14.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 8, line 18, after the abbreviation "Sec.", strike out "15" and insert "14."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 9, after line 2, strike out all of section 16.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Renumber sections 17 and 18 as sections 16 and 17.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: Page 9, after line 15, insert a new section, to be known as section 17 and to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. This act shall take effect only when the sum of at least $1,000,000 of the appropriation herein authorized shall have been made and shall be available for expenditure to carry into effect the provisions of this act."

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer section 17 because all the good that can be accomplished by this bill lies in the proposal to eliminate forever the conflict which has existed and now exists between the native reindeer owners and those owners who are not natives. I propose by this amendment that the act shall take effect only when the sum of at least $1,000,000 of the appropriation authorized shall have been appropriated and be available for expenditure.

I have stated often and I state again that unless we proceed to buy up the reindeer owned by the white men and make this a proposition for the natives alone we do not want and we do not need any legislation. In proposing this section I want to prevent the possibility that the bill will be passed and that years and years may elapse before we ever get any appropriation, if we do get one finally. This amendment does not do a bit of harm, because until the appropriation is made the bill does not take effect, and that is all there is to it. I do not insist on the full appropriation of $2,000,000 immediately because I realize Congress seldom makes an appropriation at one time of the full amount authorized, believing it may be better to make the appropriation a part at a time.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In other words, if the Committee on Appropriations should decide that $500,000 is enough for the first year in order to start this proposition, the act would not go into effect. Is this what the gentleman means?

Mr. DIMOND. The gentleman is correct. I know that $500,000 is not enough, so what is the use of kidding ourselves about this thing? If we are going to do this job, let us do it right. I appeal to the House to support my amendment, which is reasonable and for the benefit of the natives.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment was submitted to the committee when we were considering the bill, and we voted it down for the reason that one of the most important things in connection with the entire bill is the control of the range of Alaska. Whether or not the Federal Government purchases the reindeer for the natives, it is important that the Federal Government put into effect immediately a range survey and control in Alaska; otherwise, in a short time there will be no grazing for what reindeer are there now.

I ask that the amendment be voted down, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GREENWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1722) to provide subsistence for the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska by establishing for them a permanent and self-sustaining economy, to encourage and develop native activity in all branches of the reindeer industry, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 317, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GREEN and Mr. HARLAN) there were—ayes 109, noes 51.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum was not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-four Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INSPECTION OF SOLDIERS' HOSPITALS AND OTHER VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION FACILITIES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution (H. Res. 325) and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 325

Resolved, That the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, or any subcommittee thereof which its chairman may appoint, be, and they are hereby, empowered to make a comprehensive survey and inspection of soldiers' hospitals and other Veterans' Administration facilities, including any hospital with which the Government has a contract for ex-service men of any war in which the United States was engaged. This shall include the national military homes for disabled volunteer soldiers. The management, administration, personnel of such institutions, and treatment of the veterans therein shall be included in such survey and investigation.

Said committee shall make a report of its findings to the House not later than January 3, 1938, accompanied by such recommendations in the form of a bill or otherwise as it may deem necessary.

Said committee or subcommittees are empowered to sit during the sessions of Congress or during the recess between sessions of Congress, and to incur necessary expenses for transportation and subsistence and for clerical and stenographic services, which shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. TABER, Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, and Mr. SACKS rose.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. We have been passing a bill here that smells to high heaven, and I do not know but what this resolution could go far enough so that it might also.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will not object. I think this resolution will serve a very useful purpose. The veterans in the hospitals are very anxious to have the Members of Congress protect their interests. This gives them an opportunity to tell about the kind of care they have and the kind of care they need and we can see at first hand what further hospital facilities are needed. It will cost very little and will do a great deal of good.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that I am following a precedent set by Hon. Royal Johnson when he was chairman of this committee. In 1924 a resolution of this kind was passed and such an inspection was made. There has been no such inspection since that time and it is deemed necessary, not only on the part of the members of the committee, but on the part of the Veterans Administration that the various members of this committee visit these homes and hospitals and make this inspection and report back to the Congress.

Since the time of the last inspection, I believe we have spent $72,000,000 on these hospitals. We cannot all visit them, the entire committee could not visit them, and it is my intention, if the resolution passes, to appoint each member a committee of one to visit the hospitals near him in order that the Congress may have a report on the hospitals when we reconvene.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the fact that although I am in sympathy——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the matter the gentleman is going to discuss has nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. SACKS. I am discussing the bill and I want to ask the gentleman a question. Although I am in sympathy with the legislation for those who fought in the war, I also would like to know whether the gentleman is in sympathy with legislation to help those who stayed at home and need it now, the working men and women of this country who need help right now.

Mr. RANKIN. I have done my best to protect the working people from the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the last few months, Mr. Speaker, and I shall be pleased to continue to do so. [Laughter.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to remind the gentleman of the work done by a subcommittee he appointed a few years ago to inspect hospitals and certain guardianship matters by which a great deal of money was recovered for the veterans, and I believe $3,000 of the money appropriated for the inspection was not used and was returned to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and, Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Members of the House, in my opinion this will save the Government a great deal of money in the years to come, and I do not see how we can afford to go ahead and spend all this money on these hospitals without some Members visiting them and making an inspection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. How much money will this investigation cost?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know exactly, but I told the chairman of the Committee on Accounts this morning it would not cost over $10,000, and I do not think it will cost over $5,000.

Let me say to the gentleman from New York that since I have been chairman of the Veterans' Committee I have seen to it that the committee did not waste money in overhead expenditures, and the committee has gone along with me and we have not wasted the Government's money. I am going to ask that the members who are appointed hold their expenses down to a minimum. This is not a junketing trip, but simply what we consider a necessary inspection of these various hospitals.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman think he can keep it down to $5,000?

Mr. RANKIN. I hope so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, may I ask a question?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the regular order has been demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FARM LEGISLATION

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 207, expressing the views of the Congress as to the program for relief and benefit of agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 207, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 207

Resolution expressing the views of the Congress as to a program for the relief and benefit of agriculture

Whereas the whole Nation suffers when agriculture is depressed; and

Whereas the Nation has felt and still feels the unfavorable economic consequences of two different kinds of misfortune in agriculture; and

Whereas the first of these misfortunes was the ruinous decline in farm prices from 1929 to 1932; and

Whereas the second kind of misfortune was the drought of 1934, followed by the drought of 1936; and

Whereas a permanent farm program should (a) provide not only for soil conservation but also for developing and improving the crop-adjustment methods of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, (b) protect agriculture and consumers against the consequences of drought, and (c) safeguard farmers and the business of the Nation against the consequences of farm-price decline; and

Whereas it is the sense of Congress that the permanent farm legislation should be based upon the following fundamental principles:

(1) That farmers are entitled to their fair share of the national income;

(2) That consumers should be afforded protection against the consequences of drought, floods, and pestilences causing abnormally high prices by storage of reserve supplies of big crop years for use in time of crop failure;

(3) That if consumers are given the protection of such an ever-normal granary plan, farmers should be safeguarded against undue price declines by a system of loans supplementing their national soil-conservation program; and

(4) That control of agricultural surpluses above the ever-normal granary supply is necessary to safeguard the Nation's investment in loans and to protect farmers against a price collapse due to bumper yields resulting in production beyond all domestic and foreign need: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That abundant production of farm products should be a blessing and not a curse, that therefore legislation carrying out the foregoing principles will be first to engage the attention of the Congress upon its reconvening, and that it is the sense of the Congress that a permanent farm program based upon these principles should be enacted as soon as possible after Congress reconvenes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I listened to this general essay that was read by the Clerk I cannot see that there is anything specially that I should object to, but it would seem to me that there would be just as much sense in bringing in a resolution here and solemnly resolving that a majority of the House of Representatives believed in the Ten Commandments as it is to bring in this kind of a resolution. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] what is the purpose of bringing in this kind of a resolution?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, if it is no more objectionable than the Ten Commandments, there should not be any objection to passing it.

Mr. SNELL. But there ought to be some reason for it.

Mr. JONES. It declares the purpose of the Congress in effect to take up general farm legislation in the early part of the next session of Congress.

Mr. SNELL. Has there been anyone on the floor of the House who has said that he is not interested in the general welfare of the farmer, and that he is not willing to take up legislation at any time the Agricultural Committee sees fit to propose it to Congress?

Mr. JONES. I do not think I have known of anyone doing that.

Mr. SNELL. Then what is the object of taking this up now? There is something back of it, and I would like to know what it is.

Mr. JONES. I can see no objection to it. I may state to the gentleman that there are certain provisions of the present law that authorize the making of loans on any of the farm commodities when conditions reach a point where those loans seem necessary. It is thought by a great many that the making of loans on various farm commodities without some provision for the control of surpluses might involve the Government in great loss. It is thought that some sort of control over surpluses when they reach an undue stage should be formulated, some additional legislation; and it is to express the purpose of Congress to enact reasonable legislation along these lines that it is offered, with the thought that it might cause those who have the administration of the feature to which I have referred to feel they can be justified in making the loan.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman is of the same opinion that I am, that this is nothing but an alibi for the purpose of soft-soaping the farmers to make them think that sometime they are going to get something, and an excuse of the present administration for not doing anything for the American farmer.

Mr. JONES. Imagine the gentleman from New York making that statement when the debacle of 1932 should be fresh in his memory. And I say to the gentleman that I never try to soft-soap the farmer.

Mr. SNELL. If that is not expressed in this resolution and what the gentleman has said, then I do not understand the meaning of language.

Mr. JONES. As long as the gentleman has gone into that field, let me ask the gentleman if he thinks that indiscriminate loans should be made on farm commodities that run into the millions of dollars in value without some control of production or of marketing or some method of controlling overproduction being made?

Mr. SNELL. I have never advocated indiscriminate loans anywhere at any time, and the gentleman has been in control of the Agricultural Committee for 8 years, I think it is, and he is trying to alibi his lack of definite legislation. How much more does the gentleman know about it now than he did before? To me this is just a lame excuse for not doing anything for the farmer.

Mr. JONES. I do not claim to know all about this subject. There may be some who do. The farmer from Potsdam may know a lot more than I do. But this administration has done much for the farmer and it needs no alibi.

Mr. SNELL. We know that the dairy farmers of our country have not received anything from this administration but to sell their milk for low prices and pay high prices for grain.

Mr. JONES. And I say to the gentleman that this administration has done a good deal for the dairy farmer and that dairying conditions are much better than they were when the party with which the gentleman is affiliated was in power.

Mr. SNELL. That is not true. That is not a true condition of the dairy farmer today. The dairy farmer of the United States at this moment is in a worse economic condition than he has been at any time in my memory.

Mr. JONES. But the price of the dairy products are much higher than they were under a former administration.

Mr. SNELL. I am talking about the economic condition of the dairy farmer today, and I know it has never been more hopeless in recent years.

Mr. JONES. They are 75 percent higher. If the gentleman will take a poll of the dairy farmers today, he will find that not 2 percent would want to go back to the dark days of the administration of the gentleman's party.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 207 as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 207

Joint resolution expressing the views of the Congress as to a program for the relief and benefit of agriculture

Whereas the whole Nation suffers when agriculture is depressed; and

Whereas the Nation has felt and still feels the unfavorable economic consequences of two different kinds of misfortune in agriculture; and

Whereas the first of these misfortunes was the ruinous decline in farm prices from 1929 to 1932; and

Whereas the second kind of misfortune was the drought of 1934 followed by the drought of 1936; and

Whereas a permanent farm program should (a) provide not only for soil conservation but also for developing and improving the crop-adjustment methods of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, (b) protect agriculture and consumers against the consequences of drought, and (c) safeguard farmers and the business of the Nation against the consequences of farm-price decline; and

Whereas it is the sense of Congress that the permanent farm legislation should be based upon the following fundamental principles:

(1) That farmers are entitled to their fair share of the national income;

(2) That consumers should be afforded protection against the consequences of drought, floods, and pestilences causing abnormally high prices by storage of reserve supplies of big crop years for use in time of crop failure;

(3) That if consumers are given the protection of such an ever-normal granary plan, farmers should be safeguarded against undue price declines by a system of loans supplementing their national soil-conservation program; and

(4) That control of agricultural surpluses above the ever-normal granary supply is necessary to safeguard the Nation's investment in loans and to protect farmers against a price collapse due to bumper yields resulting in production beyond all domestic and foreign need;

(5) That the present Soil Conservation Act should be continued, its operations simplified, and provision made for reduced payments to large operators on a graduated scale to promote the interest of individual farming;

(6) That, linked with control of agricultural surpluses, there should be research into new uses for agricultural commodities and the products thereof, and search for new uses, new outlets, and new markets at home and abroad; and

(7) That provision should be made for applications to the Interstate Commerce Commission for correction of discriminations now existing against agricultural products in the freight-rate schedules: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That abundant production of farm products should be a blessing and not a curse, that therefore legislation carrying out the foregoing principles will be first to engage the attention of the Congress upon its reconvening, and that it is the sense of the Congress that a permanent farm program based upon these principles should be enacted as soon as possible after Congress reconvenes.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] will have 20 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time, and ask the gentleman from Kansas to use some of his time.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, is not the gentleman going to explain the resolution to the House, so that the opponents may have an opportunity to answer some of his remarks?

Mr. JONES. I will make a brief explanation. The reading of the resolution explains itself. There has been a great demand on the part of Members from both sides of the House for general farm legislation. The substance of this resolution is that in the first part of the next session of Congress the committee will consider and the Congress will consider legislation based upon the principles of trying to secure for the farmers a fair share of the national income and trying to have, in connection with it, protection for the consumers against unusual droughts and shortages, and storage in order to have an ever-normal, or something like a reserve supply of those commodities. Also connected with the system of reserve supplies, a surplus-control provision.

The House Committee on Agriculture has offered three more principles that shall be included in the legislation that will be considered. One of these is that the Soil Conservation Act should be continued, its operations simplified, and provision made for reduced payments to large operators on a graduated scale, to promote the interest of individual farmers.

Second, that linked with control of agricultural surpluses there should be research into new uses for agricultural commodities and products thereof, and search for new uses, new outlets, and new markets at home and abroad.

Third, that provision should be made for applications to the Interstate Commerce Commission for correction of discriminations now existing against agricultural products in the freight-rate schedules.

All that the resolution does is to commit the Congress to consider, at the beginning of the new session, legislation that embodies those principles and that it is the sense of the Congress that some measure should be worked out based on those principles.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Does the gentleman contend that the adoption of this resolution would bind the Committee on Agriculture and the Congress to pass legislation according to the ever-normal granary principle?

Mr. JONES. It would commit the Congress to consider legislation. It would indicate that they felt that some sort of a reverse storage provision should be made, but it does not commit to specific terms legislation.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Did we not have an understanding in the committee that the committee would not be bound by this or any other plan, that we would consider all plans of farm legislation?

Mr. JONES. Of course, and this does not keep any plan from being considered. It includes certain things, but it excludes the consideration of no measure.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I do not see how the gentleman feels he can bind the Members of Congress or the committee.

Mr. JONES. I am not trying to bind them any more than the resolution declares the necessity of intelligent effort to work out a general farm bill that will embody certain principles.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that the third whereas of this resolution, which indicates that the first misfortune which befell agriculture was as late as 1929, should be clarified or corrected? We do not want to declare an obviously incorrect fact.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman that we considered that. Three or four of these whereases are not very well worded. I did not like them, but they have been worked out by people who were trying to handle the situation, and we decided we would not take anything from the resolution but would undertake to improve it by adding something to it.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I have on numerous occasions heard Members of the House refer to the "new low" in legislative procedure, but in my judgment the resolution we are now considering is really the new low. The only way you can justify yourself in voting for this resolution is that you, first of all, must convince yourself that it does not mean anything. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture the other day gave the House a most informative discussion on agricultural legislation. I do not believe there is a man in the United States better informed on agricultural legislation than the distinguished chairman of my committee. [Applause.]

I do not think there is a man in the United States more willing to do what is necessary to aid all types of agriculture; but I submit to him that instead of bringing in this legislation here today he should have a bill, because today we are committing ourselves to the principles that are laid down in his own bill, H. R. 8246, introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Texas on August 16. If you want to know what is in this resolution, if you want to know what you are committing yourselves to by voting for this resolution, get this bill and study it, because this resolution is a definite commitment to his bill.

The gentleman from Texas made a very eloquent and a very informative speech the other day, one I have heard many Members of the House commend most favorably. If there is one thing that he emphasized above others in that very fine speech, if there is one thing that was proven to all of us by that speech, it was that the Congress and the Committee on Agriculture are not yet ready to bring in a bill for the relief of agriculture. If he convinced us of anything, he convinced us of the fact that Congress has not as yet decided what type of program we want to put into effect. If he convinced us of anything, he convinced the Members of the House that the Committee on Agriculture is not yet ready to put its stamp of approval upon this program, or upon that program, or upon any other proposal for the relief of agriculture. Still we find here today a resolution brought in to pass which means to commit you, and each and every one of you, who vote for the resolution to support the Jones bill or another bill carrying out its provisions.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Is the gentleman in favor of the bill to which he refers?

Mr. BOILEAU. No; I am not ready—and that is what I want to say to the Members of the House if I have not made myself clear—I want to say that I am not ready yet to endorse the Jones bill, nor am I ready to commit myself in favor of it, nor am I ready to say to the American farmer that I will when I come here in January vote for a bill that carries out proposals 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7—the seven various proposals that are contained in this Jones bill.

The point I want to make is: If we are ready to commit ourselves to this kind of bill, why not pass it instead of this resolution? We have not yet decided what kind of a program we want. If you are willing to commit yourselves to this program, why are you not ready to vote for it today? I am not ready to vote for the bill, and I am not ready to vote for a resolution that commits me to support that bill.

The Senate Committee on Agriculture has stated that some time during the summer it is going to hold hearings around the country to get the viewpoint of the farmers. Why do you want the viewpoint of the farmers if you have already decided, as they apparently have in the adoption of this resolution, what kind of program we are going to support? I say to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE], Do you think you will get any consideration for your cost-of-production bill if this resolution is adopted, if the Congress commits itself to this type of program rather than that which you have proposed?

I say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EICHER], Do you believe that you will be given any consideration for your bill, which is similar to the Massingale bill, if this resolution committing the Congress of the United States to this program is adopted today?

You know why this resolution is here today. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the minority leader, a little while ago tried to find out what was back of this, but I do not think his question was answered. I am going to try to answer it, if I can. The cotton farmers of the South and certain other farmers, rightfully or wrongfully, are asking for loans. I am not opposed to that program; I am not opposed to any program that fixes prices of agricultural commodities at or higher than cost of production. The reason we have this resolution here, however, is because the President of the United States said he would not make loans on cotton or anything else unless there was a control of production, a control over the production of the commodity. That is the statement he made first. Then, because of a good deal of resistance, his statement was modified so that he said then that he would not make these loans unless he had assurance that Congress would in the near future adopt the control program. Carrying out that suggestion, therefore, the Committee on Agriculture brought this resolution to you. The Senate passed it. They ask you here and now to commit yourselves in advance on a program. I submit to you it is a new low in legislation.

There are a couple of other things I would like to bring into discussion which I think are very pertinent. If you do pass this resolution, you have no assurance that you are going to get it up next January. Why? Because the Rules Committee might not let you. We have seen in recent weeks the Rules Committee successfully preventing the Congress of the United States from carrying out its will. I suggest that instead of having this resolution adopted here by the Congress that we as the House of Representatives pass a resolution respectfully requesting the members of the Rules Committee to give us a hearing to determine whether or not they will consider the bill at the next session.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is it not just as important to bring in wages-and-hours legislation?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am afraid I progressed further into that discussion than I intended to.

I submit that even if we pass this resolution there is no assurance that the legislation will be brought up. The distinguished Speaker of this House, the distinguished minority leader, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules have all been saying that we were going to have wage and hour legislation, but they have not been able to handle this powerful Rules Committee.

They have not been able to influence the Rules Committee to give the membership of the House of Representatives a chance to express their will. So we have no assurance it is going to have a hearing next year.

Mr. BARRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Is the gentleman a member of the Rules Committee?

Mr. BARRY. No.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. If it is in order, I shall offer an amendment to this resolution.

Mr. BOILEAU. Of course, that will not be in order. Nothing is in order because this resolution is being considered under a suspension of the rules. I thought the gentleman was going to tell us whether or not the Rules Committee would give us a rule next year on this legislation. Of course, I know the gentleman himself would.

Mr. SABATH. I cannot get the votes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I know the gentleman himself would.

Mr. BARRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. Is it not the members of the Rules Committee from agricultural districts who are blocking the wage and hour bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. I can assure the gentleman it is not a member of the Rules Committee from my State. They do not allow Progressives on the Rules Committee, or you would have more votes to carry out some of this liberal legislation. I suggested at the beginning of the session you ought to have more liberals on your committees. I suggested to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] the other day that it would be a good idea to put a few Progressives on the Rules Committee, even for just the remainder of the session. We could not do much harm.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. At one time we had one of the greatest Progressives this country ever produced on the Rules Committee. I refer to Mr. John Nelson, of Wisconsin, whom the gentleman well knows.

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; but he was a member of the Republican Party. We poor Progressives at the present time have no representation. We do not have representation on some of the important committees.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman to whom I referred was one of your predecessors and a leader.

Mr. BOILEAU. He served with distinction for many years. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SACKS].

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, I do not have a farm in my district. The second paragraph of this resolution reads in part as follows: "Whereas the whole Nation suffers as agriculture is depressed." I want to say that all these resolutions will not help agriculture unless you help the men and women who try to earn enough to buy the products of farms in the big industrial cities. At the same time that you bring in a resolution covering agriculture you ought to bring in a resolution covering wages and hours. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied to take the word of the great leader of the Democratic administration in the House of Representatives. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has stated that, if the Rules Committee will not bring out a rule for the hour and wage bill, he will for the first time head a petition to discharge the Rules Committee. [Applause.] I am going to vote for this resolution because the word given by the gentleman who is leading us in the House today is satisfactory to me and even more so than any insignificant resolution we could pass.

Mr. BARRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SACKS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. How many Members from agricultural districts attended the caucus last night?

Mr. SACKS. Very few. May I say that I hope that the Members representing the big cities will vote for this resolution because agriculture is a problem for every section of the country, as well as wages and hours.

I wish to state that although this resolution may state that the first order of business shall be the farm bill, I will vote, and I am sure my colleagues from the cities will vote, to defeat any farm bill unless the wage-and-hour bill is passed. The President wants both bills, the country needs both. The farmer and laborer must be lifted from their low ebb regardless of the obstructionist methods of those in the House who represent the Economic Royalists and the special-privileged class. To me, America can only be saved by the aid to labor and farmer alike. Rules Committee or no Rules Committee, American justice for farm and labor will prevail.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I trust that those Members who represent industrial centers will vote for this resolution. In so doing we will be following our usual custom. During the three terms I have been here, I have always observed that the Democratic Members from the industrial districts have invariably voted in favor of farm legislation. We have gone along on the broad, nationalistic theory, that agriculture had to be assisted, that the farmers of our country who till the soil must be prosperous in order that they may have sufficient purchasing power to consume the products that are produced in our large industrial centers.

I trust the chairman of this great committee, the distinguished and able gentleman who has given so much of his time and energy to the perplexing problems affecting agriculture, will go along next year with the general program recommended by the President of the United States and attempt to persuade his colleagues on his committee to join him in order that our program may not alone give succor to the agriculturists but that it will also aid the wage earners in our cities and industrial centers. I sincerely hope that program will also include a pledge for the early passage of a decent and fair wage and hour bill.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER].

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced House Resolution No. 327 which would authorize the Speaker to appoint a special committee to investigate the alleged activities of the Government departments in behalf of those who were resorting to violence to prevent men from working in order to support themselves and their families.

During the labor difficulties in the early summer, representatives of the Committee on Industrial Organization, which is known and abbreviated as the C. I. O., the press reported that the organizers of the C. I. O. at the plant of the Republic Steel Corporation in an appeal to their followers who were in possession of the plant of that company said, "Four departments of the Government are fighting on our side." The Government has spent billions with the alleged purpose of putting men back on the pay roll and to keep them at work; and when industrial and agricultural conditions hold promise of better days, it is alleged that the Government of the United States is backing those who would prevent men from working to keep their families from want and off the relief rolls, and it is boasted that the Government is putting its strong hand into the scales to keep men from working and from earning an honest livelihood.

If this is true it should be known to every citizen of the country. If this Government, after squandering billions of money in a futile attempt to put men back to work, lends its strong arm in backing armed mobs who assault workmen who attend to their own business and who want only to be left alone in earning a living, it is high time that the people of the country who furnish the money to create jobs should know if the Government is fighting on the side of those who would stifle the arteries of commerce and paralyze the heart of trade. We will have no lasting prosperity until men get back on the pay rolls of industry.

In these strikes and labor disputes there was no dispute about wages, hours, or conditions of labor, merely a matter of who was to be recognized as the bargaining agency. If the Government is to take any part in such a dispute it should be as a disinterested arbitrator to determine in an impartial manner who should constitute the bargaining agency; and that once determined, the Government should keep its hands off and permit those who want to work to resume their occupation, so that the mills can be opened and the factories set to work in order to stimulate trade and industry. It is alleged that instead of doing this, the Government, through its agencies, is putting men on the relief rolls who are preventing others from working as well as refusing to work themselves. If such a destructive condition exists and the administration is aiding and abetting such sinister enterprise it is high time that the people know it and that it be exposed.

On the other hand, if it is not true, it is a base slander of the administration and the public should know that too. Something is radically wrong when nature at last seems to be cooperating to bring about great harvests with good prices for the farmer and stock raiser and industry is willing to supply the goods and merchandise which depleted stores now demand, a sinister, arrogant, and destructive organization of radical communistic labor agitators, led by a master agitator who is growing powerful with the money secured from his deluded followers, claim that four departments of our Government are fighting on their side. We are inquiring if this is true, and, if true, why it is true. Is the Government slamming shut the door of opportunity to work in the face of hungry men who want to work? We are asking if this is true. It is charged that these mobs that surround industries and intimidate those who want to work are being supported on the relief rolls. We are asking if this is true. The country is asking if this is true. If the Government is supporting in idleness the men who by their threats of bloodshed dictate to a weak and palsied administration a cowardly course which is certain to involve us in riot and revolution, it is time the people know about it. If the Government is permitting these lawless groups to defy the courts and the local authorities in their efforts to preserve the peace of their communities and stands irresolute and helpless before anarchy, it is time the people learn about it. Is the Government going to permit by its weakness or connivance the overthrow of law and order? If it is, it is high time that the people be made aware of it.

If this is to be another Buchanan administration which by its lack of energy and patriotism, its supine and criminal carelessness allowed the arms and munitions of war to be turned over to those who plotted the overthrow of our Government, it is time the people knew about it. By wanton duplicity or inexcusable weakness the Buchanan administration permitted us to be dragged into a war that by firmness and the ordinary means of public defense could have prevented a great civil war and the death of nearly a million of the best men on earth, a war that we know now might have been avoided by firmness and diplomacy. Instead, misguided and impatient men in a time of bitter controversy and sectional hatred, were encouraged by the very Government that was to be destroyed. President Buchanan allowed his Cabinet members to transfer to southern territory the arms and munitions of war, and so encouraged those honest but misguided fellow countrymen to engage in a civil war that to this generation can only seem a colossal mistake at incalculable cost to all of us.

At this moment the administration is pursuing a course that may reasonably bring on violence and widespread rioting and disaster. Is it not time that the people know why the Government is pursuing this destructive course? Can it be that the half million dollars contributed to the Democratic campaign fund by the John L. Lewis machine has anything to do with it? If not, then the people have a right to know what else may be the sinister influence which leads to this dire end. Does the administration want to prolong the depression in order to spend more billions on relief for political purposes? If not, why does not the administration aid in putting men back on the pay rolls instead of, as alleged, putting idle strikers whose only business is to intimidate the men who want to get back to work, on relief rolls?

Why is it that this administration is aiding and abetting John L. Lewis and his red cohorts instead of backing a great constructive statesmanlike leader like William Green, the worthy successor of Samuel Gompers who did so much to help labor and that without alining himself with the radical importations of Europe. Mr. Green has made a gallant and wise fight against the communistic element of labor which threatens to discredit the whole labor movement. Against this radical element Green has with unselfish and wise leadership held the American Federation of Labor true to American ideas and ideals in spite of all the efforts radical and communistic influences to introduce into America the violence and radicalism of the Old World led by conscienceless demagogues who bleed their victims white for their own profit and aggrandizement. In such a contest every decent element should uphold the hands and efforts of William Green. Is this administration supporting this wise and patriotic pilot who has only the good of labor at heart, or is it sustaining the radical element led by Lewis who contributed nearly a half million to the President's campaign fund? Are the people not entitled to know the answer to this question?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] 3 minutes.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, as far as the farmer is concerned, this resolution is as impotent as that other legislative eunuch, the so-called Neutrality Act, and will do just as much good. [Applause.]

We are today passing a deficiency bill that gives $55,000,000 to sugar and $60,000,000 to cotton, but not one dime for the dairying interests. The dairying interests have been traded off year in and year out in every single reciprocal-trade agreement that has been made by this country. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, you cannot lull the dairy people to sleep and sing them a lullaby with this kind of a declaration that is simply intended to fool the farmer. It does not do anything for the farmer, and if passed, will not benefit him in the slightest degree. Under the rules we cannot amend this resolution, but you Democrats who have absolute control of both Houses of Congress could do something really worth while for our farmers if you would place an embargo on all imports of farm products, especially dairy products, unless such products meet the same sanitary and hygienic standards as our own farmers must meet under both Federal and State laws This would give our farmers an even break.

Not one single, solitary thing has been done for the dairy farmer, and we who represent the dairy interests know it. The farmer also knows it, because he is beginning to cry out against the high prices he is now being compelled to pay for every farm implement he buys, while his own products within the last 60 days have declined in price. There is no benefit to which I can point that has been given the dairy interests in the last 8 years by any declaration or act of Congress. On the contrary, we have been sacrificed again and again for legislation which has given payments to the manufacturing districts but has sacrificed us in the trade that brought about such payments.

Mr. Speaker, to the phrase in this resolution which recites that farmers are entitled to their fair share in the national income, I would add that the farmer should be protected from the unfair practices of the processor and the gambler in farm products, who is getting the benefit of the increase in prices which ought to go to the farmer, but which he is not receiving.

Over a month ago I introduced a bill which would require that all dairy products imported from abroad must meet the same sanitary standards as are now required from our own dairy farmers. Surely, such a bill is eminently fair. You ask our farmer to have herds that are free from tuberculosis, but you permit foreigners to sell their milk, butter, and cheese in this country without demanding that such products be produced by herds likewise free from tuberculosis. So we find our farmers in the dairy business discriminated against in two respects: i. e., undersold by cheaply produced cream, cheese, and butter; and also undermined by dairy products that meet no standards that the cows shall be free from disease. No one can claim that this kind of treatment is a square deal for our dairy farmers. And now he is to be pacified and reconciled to this kind of treatment with the salve contained in this resolution. I want to assure the Members that our dairy farmers are much too intelligent to be duped by any such tactics.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the chairman of the committee if I am correct in understanding that in voting for this resolution a Member of the House does not bind himself to any particular kind of agricultural legislation?

Mr. JONES. That is my understanding. I do not think any individual Member binds himself to any specific legislation. The Congress declares its purpose to consider legislation based on certain principles, and then declares that it is the sense of Congress that a general farm program along the lines of these principles and based on them will be worked out. Of course, the full details will have to be worked out later. It will all depend on whether we are able to work out a satisfactory bill.

Mr. VOORHIS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I cannot yield, I have only 1 minute left.

Mr. BOILEAU. Read the bill.

Mr. JONES. It is not confined to the principles laid down here.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this resolution. I believe every progressive Member of the House will vote for it. I believe most of those Members who are particularly interested in the welfare of wage earners will vote for it.

May I point out that the farmers of this country are fairly well organized. There are several million people in the ranks of labor who are well organized. Business interests, industrialists, and many other groups of our citizens are organized. However, there is one group of people who are not organized, and they are the very people who will be helped by a wage and hour bill. One of our great responsibilities is not only to see to it that we do justice by the farmers of this Nation, which I am as earnestly eager to do as anyone else, but to see to it that we do justice to those people who cannot speak out on their own behalf, who send no one here to speak for them but who need and deserve the help of their representatives in Congress more than any other group of citizens. It is my earnest hope that we will not only pass this farm resolution but that if we do not pass a wage and hour bill at this session we will get a much better, more clear cut, and stronger bill at the next session. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, 1 minute is not much time, but it gives me time to say that this resolution is a proper and fitting end to this session of Congress. It should be easy to vote for this resolution, just as easy as it would be to vote for a resolution stating that the Congress of the United States deplores sin and praises virtue. It means nothing and will accomplish nothing except perhaps fool the farmers for a few more months.

For 5 years as a Member of Congress from an industrial city I have given my vote in behalf of nearly all agricultural propositions that have come before the House. The rural bloc in this House have had my vote first. Last night we saw the fallacy of giving our vote first, because we could not even get a caucus convened to say something in praise of the wage and hour bill, which is dead in the Committee on Rules because of the refusal of some Members from agricultural sections to even answer to their names on a quorum call. Perhaps today I may be again persuaded to give my vote first to an agricultural measure after being here 5 years, but if I do, I may say as one Representative from an industrial area that unless we get a wage and hour bill it is time for me to take care of my people to the exclusion of all other interests and cast my vote against all agricultural legislation until the members from rural districts agree to help the workers of my industrial district to fair wages and hours and decent living conditions.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that there is existing authority to make loans on agricultural products such as cotton, tobacco, corn, and wheat, which all enter into international trade or are governed by a world price. However, that loan provision is a stop-gap. It is also my understanding that by voting for this resolution no one is binding himself to anything specific, except that he will vote for a general farm program which will be worked out by the committee.

It is my judgment that agriculture is one of the most important factors in our economic system. I believe we ought to seek to help the men who work in industry, the men who are organized, and the men who are not organized. I believe that agriculture should be prosperous in order that the agriculturist be enabled to purchase the products of industry. If labor and agriculture are both prosperous everybody will be prosperous. For that reason I support this resolution.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty accord with enacting a further helpful program for agriculture in the next session of the Seventy-fifth Congress. However, I would offer an amendment to the pending resolution if it would be in order under the rules to the effect that we shall dispose of the wage and hour legislation in the next session prior to the consideration of the subject of this resolution by the Congress of the United States.

It seems to me that one of the soundest ways in which we can aid agriculture would be to increase the purchasing power of the low-income wage earners of this country. They could then buy the farm products.

Such legislation does not attempt to raise wages already adequate, but it does aim to provide help for that great group of underpaid workers who can only buy when they have money with which to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, this resolution states that in the next session we shall first consider agricultural legislation. I am in favor of such legislation, but I should like to see the word "first" stricken out. We must also consider wage and hour legislation. Therefore, I ask the chairman to take out the word "first" to make it easier for those of us who favor wage and hour legislation to vote for this resolution.

Mr. JONES. I may say to the gentleman that this resolution has been brought up under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to ask about an amendment to the resolution.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield for a parliamentary inquiry. The same question has been asked a half dozen times, and everybody knows what the situation is. I think we have covered the subject pretty well.

Mr. SABATH. I should like to have somebody answer my inquiry. I want to know whether it will be in order to offer the amendment which has been suggested by the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman knows that under a motion to suspend the rules no amendment is in order. This is farm legislation we are considering today. The gentleman can offer any resolution he wants to offer.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, what benefit does the dairyman get? This resolution, no. 207, is just a subterfuge to make some of our farmers believe they are to have some great things done for their benefit in the near future, and, on the other hand, find Members voting for it to the ever-normal granary and price fixing along N. R. A. lines.

The cotton farmers have been guaranteed a loan and the beet- and cane-sugar farmers are being paid some $50,000,000 to subsidize them, and this is paid by the consumers in a tax of one-half cent per pound on all of the sugar they use, but what about the dairy farmer?

The tariff on our dairy products, such as cream and cheese, from Canada has been cut in half by reciprocal-trade agreements. Also butter and cheese are let in from other countries at a low rate in competition with our own farmers. Eggs in millions of dozens come in from the Far East with a very light tariff. To sum up, the cotton and sugar farmers have been taken care of in a strong financial way by the Government, while the dairy farmer has been taken care of with a fine resolution promising him perhaps an ever-normal granary that will be of no use only to increase taxes. For example, every year since 1866, a period of some 70 years, there has been only 1 year that we have not carried over a surplus of wheat; therefore only once in that time would it have been of use. The expense in taxes would have been many times the benefit. All the dairymen have got is increased costs of feed and a lower price for milk.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am taking this time to keep the record straight. Either this resolution means something or it means nothing. The understanding we had in our Committee on Agriculture was to the effect that it did not mean anything, and that the adoption of the resolution would not in any way interfere with the committee's deliberation in the consideration of any type of farm legislation proposed either by the members of the committee, by farm organizations, or by other individuals. So when the resolution was reported from the committee it was reported with this understanding, and this is the understanding that the Members of the House should have about it if they vote for the resolution here today.

If you have the understanding that this resolution binds the Congress, you should know what you are binding, because you are agreeing here to enact legislation that contains the ever-normal granary plan proposed by Secretary Wallace. No one outside of Mr. Wallace knows anything about that plan. The Members of Congress, including the members of the Committee on Agriculture, have no knowledge of the workings of such a plan. It is proposed by the Secretary that this plan becomes operative for cotton, wheat, tobacco, rice, and corn. For the last 65 years we have had surpluses in these commodities with the exception of 1 year, and we have found that even back in 1932, although the resolution deplores the low-price level between 1929 and 1932, we did have large surpluses in this country and we found the larger the surpluses were or the larger the amount of the visible supply on hand, the lower the prices would be in the domestic and in the world markets. The Secretary proposes, in his ever-normal granary scheme to pile up more surpluses, and unless we have a definite price-fixing plan to maintain the price, we will find the price will go lower than it was in 1932.

I also call your attention to one of the whereases in this resolution:

> Whereas the first of these misfortunes was the ruinous decline in farm prices from 1929 to 1932.

You cotton fellows will recall that in 1931, when cotton was selling at 18 cents a pound, the administration in power at that time, under the Farm Board, loaned you 16 cents a pound on cotton, and still you call attention to the ruinous prices between 1928 and 1932. You have not had 18-cent cotton since the present administration came into power, and I doubt very much if you will ever again see 18-cent cotton unless you do something to restore the world market for the cotton produced throughout the South.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I cannot yield.

This year we are threatened with a large cotton crop of 15,500,000 bales, despite the fact that nearly 20,000,000 acres of cotton and tobacco lands were taken out of cultivation under the soil-conservation program. You are having a carry-over of nearly 6,000,000 bales from last year's crop, which will give you a total of around 22,000,000 bales going into this new crop year. You do not need to raise one single bale of cotton in 1938, and still you would have enough left over, nearly 12,000,000 bales, to last another year.

This resolution does not mean anything, and you will have to leave it to your own judgment whether or not you want to vote for it.

Instead of passing a resolution that means nothing, we should have considered and passed permanent and sound farm legislation beneficial to agriculture. For the last 18 months I have tried repeatedly in our committee to have considered farm legislation, but for some unknown reason the administration leaders have refused to permit its consideration.

I realize that it is no easy job to draft a farm bill; I am sure, however, that the Committee on Agriculture can do it with the aid of the farmers and others who are interested in the future welfare of this country.

I lament the fact that farm legislation has not been enacted during this session, but the responsibility for the failure to do so does not lie with the Committee on Agriculture. The members of the committee on both sides have been willing, but powerful administration forces have stopped us from functioning. I hope that the committee, under the able leadership of Chairman JONES, will draft a constructive and sound farm bill during the recess and have it ready for action when Congress convenes in January. I am willing to do my part as a Representative from Minnesota and as a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlemen from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman a question. Having heard this resolution discussed, I regard it as somewhat of a facilitating sort of resolution, and I want to ask the chairman if it is not possible and probable that any kind of farm legislation, even including the cost of production or the issuance of debentures to take care of surplus farm products might be given consideration by the committee?

Mr. JONES. I think that is correct. I do not believe the resolution excludes anything.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution ought to be adopted by a unanimous vote of this House. Contrary to some of the views which have been expressed this resolution does not commit the House to any particular form of legislation.

We all know there are certain general principles which will have to be followed in enacting any general farm legislation, but there are different ways of putting those principles into effect. All this resolution does is to state that it is the sense of Congress that we should take this matter up early in the next session. We ought to do that. I see no reason why we should not go on record at this time as saying that is what we intend to do. That when we come back here in January or earlier we intend to make farm legislation the first order of business. I am sure that the Committee on Agriculture will give full consideration to the entire question and to all plans which may be proposed.

I hope the resolution passes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 193, noes 36.

So two-thirds having voted in favor thereof the rules were suspended, and the resolution was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FARM LEGISLATION

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Resolution 324, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to sit and act during recesses of the Seventy-fifth Congress, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, and to hold such hearings as the committee may determine, in connection with the consideration and preparation of a bill or bills providing for a permanent agricultural conservation and adjustment program. For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to employ such stenographic services, to have such printing and binding done, and to incur such other expenses, as the committee may deem necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the chairman if it is within the province of this committee to also take up the question of the effect of agricultural imports?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the question of import duties comes primarily from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I understand that, but I remind the chairman of the committee that we have this situation——

Mr. JONES. The gentleman understands that when a measure is presented, the major part of it governs the committee to which it is referred, and sometimes on the incidental part of a measure we are permitted to have certain other matters of jurisdiction, but as to the question of imports, of course we cannot consider that.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I am not so much concerned about the import duties as I am about permitting imports of agricultural products not produced under the same sanitary and hygienic conditions as are required of our own farmers, and I am unalterably opposed to letting in foreign imports that do not meet the tubercular test.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EXPENSES OF FARM-PROGRAM INVESTIGATION

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, at this late hour it is impossible to secure a meeting of the Committee on Accounts. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Resolution 330, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 330

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by H. Res. 324, incurred by the Committee on Agriculture acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $5,000, including the expenditures for the employment of experts, clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or by any subcommittee thereof, conducting such investigation or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. Provided, That the committee shall, during hearings in the District of Columbia, use the committee stenographers of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EXPENSES OF WORLD WAR VETERANS' INVESTIGATION

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. Res. 331, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 331

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 325, incurred by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $5,000, including the expenditures for the employment of experts, clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, or by any subcommittee thereof, conducting such investigation or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. Provided, That the Committee shall, during hearings in the District of Columbia, use the committee stenographers of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I rise for the purpose of stating that if I had known that the resolution which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] offered was to be considered by unanimous consent, although it is water now over the dam, I would have objected to its consideration. It happened I was called out of the Chamber at the time. I think the Members of this House who have veterans' facilities in their cities or in their vicinity are well able to come here and present their cause to Congress when, after a thorough investigation, they feel that something additional is needed. I do not think it requires a committee of this House to go to the four corners of the country and make investigations for that purpose.

My record in assisting veterans speaks for itself. I think I have the confidence of the veterans' organization in my city. Whenever they find that veterans are not properly cared for I am sure they will advise me and, as I have in the past, I will respond without delay.

Other Members, where veterans' facilities are located, likewise respond when called upon, so why is it necessary for a legislative committee to make such investigations? It is my view that it would be better for all concerned if the resolution had not passed.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object to the consideration of this resolution, because the House has already passed the resolution authorizing this committee to make the investigation, but, I repeat, had I known that the resolution was to be called up by unanimous consent, for the reason I have stated, I would have objected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say in connection with what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has stated, that this committee in its investigation ought to take into consideration the facilities they now have in public hospitals in the various communities, so that they do not come back here and recommend that the Government build additional hospitals, when the various municipalities have now already private hospitals adequate for veterans as well as citizens of this country, and the committee can make it a matter of economy in their investigation by giving consideration to this fact, both from the standpoint of the ex-service men as well as the public and adequate hospital facilities, I believe, will be found now to exist in many, many localities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE, ROY v. JENKS

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 329.

House Resolution 329

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by the House in the contested-election case of Roy versus Jenks, incurred by the Committee on Election No. 3, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $5,000, including the expenditures for the employment of experts, clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or by any subcommittee thereof, conducting such investigation or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. Provided, That the committee shall during hearings in the District of Columbia use the committee stenographers of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CRAVENS]?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this resolution should properly come from the Committee on Accounts. However, it is carrying out the mandate of the House as expressed yesterday, and I think the amount is entirely reasonable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALARIES OF DEPUTY UNITED STATES MARSHALS—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 365)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 6453, Seventy-fifth Congress, entitled "An act to increase the minimum salaries of deputy United States marshals to $2,000 per annum."

This bill proposes to fix the compensation of deputy United States marshals who are paid on a salary basis, other than those whose principal duties are of a clerical nature, at a rate of not less than $2,000 per annum, effective beginning July 1, 1937. It entails an estimated annual expense of $195,000.

There are now 964 deputy marshals on a salary basis, including 18 who are paid from the appropriations for the District of Columbia. Their salaries range from $360 to $3,700 per annum. The duties of 568 are of such a nature as to bring them within the beneficial provisions of the bill. The annual salaries of 10 of those thus benefited range from $360 to $1,200, while the compensation of the others in this group ranges from $1,260 to $1,980 per annum, the average annual salary being $1,647.50.

Under existing law the Attorney General fixes the compensation of deputy United States marshals (28 U. S. C. 582). While he is limited in this authority by the amount of funds appropriated by the Congress, the deputy marshals are in no different situation in this respect than the personnel of many other services.

Salaries of deputy marshals were revised by the Field Classification Act of December 6, 1924, and later by the act of May 28, 1928, which authorized the heads of the several executive departments and independent establishments to adjust the compensation of certain civilian positions in the field service to correspond, as far as practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act for positions in the District of Columbia.

The appropriation for salaries, fees, and expenses of marshals, United States courts, contained in the annual appropriation act for the Department of Justice, fiscal year 1938, is $3,560,000, an increase of $65,000 over my Budget recommendation for this item. However, this increase will permit the Attorney General to effect a number of salary adjustments in the lower pay brackets. I might add, in this connection, that there are many other services of the Government just as deserving of promotions as the deputy marshals. No provision has been made for these cases because of the condition of the Budget. I am not in favor of giving preferential treatment to any single group of employees.

The question of the pay of deputy United States marshals may be annually submitted for consideration in the Budget estimates, and salary adjustments in individual cases may be made administratively from time to time by the Attorney General. To fix the minimum pay of all deputy United States marshals, whose duties are not of a clerical nature, at $2,000 would provide in some instances a compensation entirely out of proportion to the duties performed and would discriminate against other personnel in the Federal service.

For the foregoing reasons, I am constrained to withhold my approval of this measure.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 20, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSERVATION, PRODUCTION, EXPLOITATION, AND SALE OF HELIUM GAS

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 323. The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 323

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1567, an act authorizing the conservation, production, exploitation, and sale of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense and to the development of commercial aeronautics, authorizing the acquisition, by purchase or otherwise, by the United States of properties for the production of helium gas, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FADDIS. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that changes our present law with reference to the control of helium. The purpose of the bill primarily is to make helium cheaper, for two purposes: One, for medical use, and the other for commercial aviation.

The present law provides that the Government may lease helium to private individuals, and that private individuals, when in possession of helium or developing helium, may ship it abroad with licenses. The result of this is that the licenses are so difficult to get and the Government is not in operation of anything, that our production of helium is so uneconomical and so small that the cost of helium is prohibitive for both commercial and medical purposes.

It is practically invaluable in the treatment of respiratory diseases, for reasons that time will not permit discussing.

The gist of this bill is that the Government shall take over what little helium supply there is in private hands. It does not amount to very much. The Government already owns practically all of our available helium supply. The Government is then going to provide this helium under Government operation, and sell it to hospitals and make it available also for commercial aviation purposes. Then what surplus there may be, arising from the operation of these plants, shall be sold to foreign countries, provided it is not in sufficient quantities to be used for military purposes and provided the supply is checked so that it cannot be available for military purposes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is it not a fact that the only country that is going to buy helium is Germany, that no other country in the world can use helium or has requested it except Germany?

Mr. HARLAN. I understand the gentleman's question. It is, so far as immediate requests are concerned. I understand there have been but two countries interested in this; one is Germany and the other is Italy, because they are the only countries that are now developing lighter-than-air craft. But, Mr. Speaker, if the United States Government wants to develop its own lighter-than-air traffic, and there is every reason why we should for commercial purposes, we must make this gas available to foreign countries, not only to Germany but to England, when the time comes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman said that the purpose of the legislation is to make helium available for commercial purposes to foreign nations.

Mr. HARLAN. The surplus; yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. He contends that it is not available at the present time?

Mr. HARLAN. There are two things that keep it from being available: First, our method of production is so uneconomical that it makes the helium too expensive for that use; second, there is practically none available anyway. If we want helium we have to operate the plant at very large capacity, and it has to be in continuous operation, because it is a compression and refrigeration process. For instance, if we produce but 5,000,000 cubic feet a year it will cost us $20 per 1,000 cubic feet, but if we produce 24,000,000 cubic feet a year it will cost us approximately one-third of that amount, or $7 per 1,000 cubic feet. So if this commodity is to be available to us for our own aviation, if it is to be available to our hospitals where it is needed very badly, it has got to be produced in quantities that make it economically feasible, and this bill does that very thing.

We are asked: "Why not use it in our aviation; let the others go, and store it?" Just picture to yourselves the situation a foreign country would be in if we went in there with lighter-than-air ships filled with helium and asked to land on their territory, and if they were operating ships to this country filled with hydrogen. The American ships, of course, would take all the trade; nobody would get on an airship filled with hydrogen if they could get on one filled with helium. The result would be that no matter whether we went to England or any other place, if they were interested in lighter-than-air craft they would not let us have landing facilities. They are just ordinary human beings self-centered, such as we are. If we want to develop this it has to be a two-way development.

The military feature involved is a lot of hokum anyway. England suffered more from air warfare than any other nation, yet she saw how useless and valueless it was after the war. She has practically stopped developing it. In our own war maneuvers every one of our helium-filled ships have been put out of action theoretically. The lighter-than-air ship under present conditions has very little military value.

If we do not take the step provided in this bill we cannot even develop helium for our own aviation, and to use it as provided in this bill is not going to injure us. This country is full of Hitler haters; I understand that perfectly well. I imagine if we had a popularity contest between dust storms, measles, and Hitler it would be about a tie. But, Mr. Speaker, let us forget Hitler for a moment and permit our minds to return to the Germans we know personally. Let us look across the street back home and see that stable, substantial, honest, generous German citizen.

The things that exist in Germany at the present time are transitory. We had our own Ku Klux Klan a short time ago. These things come and go. However, if we persist in our Hitler hatred, there is no danger of our helium, under the provisions of this bill, being used for war purposes, for it disappears; it cannot be stored for any useful length of time in airships at all. A ship in crossing the ocean will lose 5 percent of its helium on one trip. So it cannot be stored any length of time for military purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I cannot yield at the moment.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I believe the gentleman made a misstatement.

Mr. HARLAN. What was the misstatement?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. That there is danger from the exportation of helium.

Mr. HARLAN. I shall have to ask the gentleman to bring that out in his own time.

Mr. Speaker, as other members of the committee are very well informed on this, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 7 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, for one, I appreciate the value of helium. I am sure all want it available for medicinal and commercial purposes at as low a price as possible. It has been rather difficult, however, to follow the advocates of the bill. When they first made their appearance before the Committee on Rules the necessity emphasized was that helium might be exported as an aid to develop lighter-than-air craft, with the cooperation of a German company.

Later, when it was found not much progress was being made the argument was advanced that under the present law it was easier to export helium than under the proposed law.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Because of the experiences we have had with our former allies, that were ungrateful, if you please, what assurance have we that they will pay us for the helium gas they take?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We have not any assurance at all. We are apparently taking everything on faith. I might say America has an abundance of faith, and as a rule gets roughly treated.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. The statement has been made by the gentleman from Ohio that helium for lighter-than-air craft is impracticable, uneconomical, and unsound. Does the gentleman know there has been a resolution introduced in this House within the last 48 hours which provides for the building of three lighter-than-air ships at $1,000,000 apiece?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; I did not know that.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman agree with that program or should we stop at once the building of lighter-than-air ships, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not care to express myself on that phase of the question, because I have not gone into it as thoroughly as I would like in order to make comment.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is it not a fact that this Government is going into the helium business just to oblige Germany, Italy, and other countries and we are going to sell them this helium at cost, without any profit to our people?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is not that the provision of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I cannot say as to that. Some one says: "Let us sell this helium to Germany and other countries in order that we may develop the commercial lighter-than-air craft." If nature has given to the United States some product which makes it possible for us to gain commercial supremacy in a particular line, then I say why should we give away that natural resource? Why not build our own ships and have them sail to Europe and to South America and develop our American trade? Why be so considerate of other countries? I question if they would aid us if conditions were reversed.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARLAN. What are we going to do with the ships unless we have some place to land them? No foreign country will let us compete with their aviation if we have helium and they do not have helium.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think that could be arranged.

Mr. HARLAN. They are just as selfish as we are.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. More so. But every country likes to have a closer communication with other countries. All seek quick transport of passengers and goods. No country would ban American ships.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Is it not a fact that the production of helium was started 20 years ago by this Government and that we spent more than $9,000,000 in the production of it? Is it not further the fact that we have a large supply on hand that we were going to export to Europe in 1918 at the expiration of the war?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman makes a valuable contribution.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point I want to bring out. It is stated helium will not be used for war purposes, and I hope it will not be. Unfortunately, we have no guaranty it will not be used for war materials, and why take the chance. Everybody knows there is danger of war, both in Europe and Asia. Scrap iron and numerous war materials are daily leaving the shores of America for foreign countries, and for one purpose alone. The nations are feverishly equipping themselves for the war which threatens.

Helium is a war material, and a valuable war material. I say in the name of common sense, Why should America give that away to some other nation? Why should we in this threatening period be placed in the possible position of not being a real neutral?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Is it not true that helium is produced by the Government only, whereas the other war materials are being sold to other nations by private individuals, and not by our own Government?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is correct, and I may add that would make the responsibility greater for the Nation, because it would involve our Nation more than if the sale were made by a private concern.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Under the present legislation, helium may be exported on license from the Secretary of State. Under the pending bill, the matter is put under the control and supervision of the Munitions Control Board, which consists of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Interior, who are required to supervise the matter. Is the gentleman afraid of the Secretary of War, for instance?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not afraid of anybody, but I do not believe in delegating this power. In the first place, I do not believe it is good policy to engage in a transaction of this kind. I believe we can well afford to proceed with caution. If there is one thing we should do it is to keep out of being involved.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. I thoroughly subscribe to what the gentleman has said about the necessity for preserving for the United States the advantages gained by our own helium reserve. Nature has favored us in that regard. I filed a minority report when the original House bill was reported. But I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that since the bill was reported and since the minority report was filed, the Senate bill has been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. It is proposed that this bill be amended to provide that no helium shall be sold for commercial purposes and for the extension of lighter-than-air craft except for ships operating between the United States and some other country. With proper safeguards covered by an amendment of that sort, I believe we can foster the development of the lighter-than-air craft on the part of American citizens who may operate ships out of America. Unless that amendment is agreed to, I shall be opposed to the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that since the Kellogg Peace Pact countries do not declare war any more. They just fight. For instance, we know that today a tremendous battle is going on in the Far East and yet nobody says there is a war. Helium could be sent to Japan or to any other country today if it wanted it under this bill. We have not an effective neutrality act. As a matter of fact, it is treated as a scrap of paper anyway, by the Administration.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts is correct. This debate in the last few minutes indicates one thing. Here is a bill of vast importance to the United States. It has been brought on the floor of the House in the final hours of a rather hectic session. We are asked with 1 hour of debate under the rule and 1 hour of general debate to pass legislation of far-reaching effect on the United States. I think this procedure is unfair and unwise. Many matters of importance have been obliged to be put over to the next session of Congress; bills of deep concern, much to our regret. And there is no reason in the world why this controversial subject cannot go over as well. No airships of the character we desire to have brought into existence will be built during the next few months. This legislation can be considered in January just as well as it can be considered now, and at that time we will then have had more experience and our judgment can be better. It is much better to go a little slow and not be obliged to repent at leisure. The forfeiture of a valuable natural resource demands the most thorough consideration.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I can answer the gentleman's question. There is an alien lobby which has been lobbying around here for this bill. I will give this Congress the names of the lobbyists and where they may be found. The committees have paid no attention to what is going on. They are all asleep.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will give the House this information.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is it not true that when the representative of the German Government, Dr. Eckener, was here lobbying and trying to get helium, the planes of the German Government were at that same time dropping bombs on helpless women and children in Spain? What guaranty have we that if we give helium to Germany or some other nation for commercial purposes such nation will not be bombing somebody else the next day?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is seldom that I oppose a report of the Committee on Rules, and I would not do so today were it not that I feared I would have no time to oppose passage of the bill.

You have never heard me say anything about Hitler and Hitlerism on the floor of this House or anywhere else. I believe the good German people in a short space of time will take care of that man; that the day must come when they will revolt against one guilty of the atrocities he has practiced; and that conditions in that country will right themselves as they should.

I am interested in our own country. I have here several communications tending to prove beyond any doubt, although I cannot verify the statements, that the only nation desiring that we export helium is Germany. For what? They say they need it for commercial purposes because they are building three lighter-than-air ships for the Brazilian trade. Well, I am not too anxious to help Germany or any other nation to develop its foreign trade. I think we might give some thought to getting that trade ourselves.

But there is even more to this proposition. An American company has started to build airships in this country that will use helium. This company advises me, in a communication I have from its representatives, that if this bill passes they will be halted in their construction of airships, and the advantage thus given to a foreign nation and to foreign interests will wipe their company out. That is something to think about.

I most certainly believe that helium should be produced for commercial and scientific purposes. We have that right now. Under the act of 1927 we are producing it. Plants are in operation, and we have from 92 to 93 percent production. I do not object to the purchase from the Louisville Gas Co. of the small interest it has in the Texas and other fields, because I do not believe this interest amounts to a great deal. It will cost us a little money, but if it serves the American people and their interests I am for it. However, I am emphatically opposed to spending $600,000 or $800,000 to help Germany, Italy, Japan, or any other war-minded country to obtain such a very important war material as helium.

They tell us it is to be used for commercial purposes only. But what guarantee is their word? Have they ever kept a treaty, a contract, or a pledge? You and I know what worth to attach to their word.

For these reasons I have felt honor bound to make known my position on this subject, so that you may decide whether we should pass this legislation or not. The act of 1927 gives us the right to produce, lease, and sell helium. I know of no reason for this legislation at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it now appears that the so-called Black-Connery bill will not be considered at this session of the Congress, I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to express my views on this most unusual and revolutionary measure.

I am opposed to this bill for many reasons. Firstly, I think it is unconstitutional, and if enacted into law will ultimately meet the same fate of the ill-starred N. R. A. after which it is fashioned but much more obnoxious. If the N. R. A. is unconstitutional, this measure is doubly so, because it possesses, in aggravated form, all of the vices of the Blue Eagle and none of its virtues, if it had any. And let me remind you, my colleagues, that the Schechter case was thrown out of the window, not by a 5-to-4, but by the unanimous vote of the Court. Secondly, I am against it because it presents, in effect, difficulties and handicaps which will inevitably lead to serious sectional consequences to both labor and industry. Thirdly, I am against it because it sets up another huge bureaucracy with an army of agents, investigators and spies who will plague the industry and labor of this country even as the flies and frogs afflicted Egypt in the days of the pharoahs.

HOW MUCH CAN WE STAND?

Mr. Speaker, I wonder just how much domination and strait jacketing the authors of such legislation as this think industry can stand. We already have the Wagner Act, and recent disclosures of kangaroo court procedure have revealed an oppression of industry by those charged with its administration, which those who voted for it never dreamed could happen. I voted for this measure expecting both labor and capital to receive just and equitable treatment, but the very reverse of the proposition has already occurred, even in the infancy of the administration of the measure. But this is typical and characteristic of bureaucracy. There is no autocrat so arbitrary and unreasonable as a bureaucrat. Senator BORAH was eminently correct a few days ago when he declared on the floor of the Senate that bureaucracy is far worse than dictatorship. We also have a Social Security Act with its retirement pay and unemployment insurance involved in administrative red tape regulations sufficient to tax to the breaking point the patience of old Job himself. I also voted for this bill, but solely on account of its old-age-pension provisions.

THEY KNOW THEIR CONGRESSMEN

These fair-haired "hot dogs" living in the "little red house" in Georgetown are very ingenious fellows, my friends. They know their Congressmen, and they know just how much New Deal pabulum and philosophy they can stand. In other words, they know just how much the "traffic will bear" and they sugar-coat accordingly. In presuming to write bills for us they are always careful to include some provision which they know the average Congressman cannot afford to oppose. It was so with the social-security bill as it was with the various relief measures. And the bill before us today partakes of the same general complexion and characteristics. Knowing the inclination of Congress to aid labor in every reasonable way, they have heroically attempted to make this a labor measure, but a close scrutiny of the provisions of this bill will convince anyone that if it is enacted into law, instead of being beneficial to labor, it will do labor untold and irreparable injury.

MY OWN EXPERIENCE

Mr. Speaker, I was born and reared on a farm and I know, from first-hand experience, something of the problems of the man who toils with his hands. I know what it is to go to work just as soon as it is light enough to see and remain in the field until it is too dark to see, under a southern sizzling summer sun. I know what it is to wrestle with a bull-tongue plow and be kicked in the solar plexus by a recalcitrant double shovel. I have a genuine interest and sympathy for the laboring man, and I do not want to impose legislation upon him which will surely make him a slave, a robot, or a guinea pig.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. In what way does the gentleman believe this bill would hurt the man who labors?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It would certainly do irreparable injury to the labor of the section of the country from which I come.

Mr. KELLER. Why should it do that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am for providing minimum wages and maximum hours, but I am opposed to the bureaucracy and the strait-jacketing processes which are set up in this bill.

Mr. KELLER. Why should the gentleman be opposed to the bill? The bill does not set them up.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. You are right as an owl.

LIVING WAGE

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I believe in a living wage. By a living wage I do not mean a wage that will simply enable the worker and his family to live from hand to mouth, eking out a miserable existence. My interpretation of a living wage is a wage that will enable the worker to enjoy not only the necessities, but some of the comforts and luxuries of life—a wage that will allow him, if industrious and frugal, to own his own home, with carpets on the floors and pictures on the walls—a wage that will permit him to own a radio, an automobile, and educate his children.

Mr. Speaker, any business or industry that cannot pay sufficient wages to enable its employees to enjoy such a "living wage" should be promptly liquidated.

OBJECTIVE COMMENDABLE

Mr. Speaker, I am for minimum-wage and maximum-hour legislation, but its enforcement should be lodged with the Department of Justice just as is other Federal statutes. I am unequivocally opposed to child labor, and voted for the pending child-labor amendment to the Constitution. I am unalterably against the so-called "sweatshop", but I contend that these objectives can all be attained without erecting another gigantic bureau to harass and hamstring industry and labor with a miscellaneous aggregation of arbitrary, red-tape rules and regulations.

During the 19 years I have served in this body, I have been a consistent friend of labor. I have never cast one vote detrimental to labor's cause, but on the contrary, I have cast a hundred or more in labor's favor. Mr. Speaker, during my service here I have learned that it is not every measure that is branded and heralded as in the interest of labor that in reality has that objective. O labor, verily, verily, how many crimes have been committed in thy name!

IS THIS A LABOR MEASURE?

What evidence have we that labor is back of this legislation. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has bitterly denounced the Senate bill, and has damned the measure before us with the faintest sort of praise. To use his own language, "The House bill is reasonably acceptable and fairly satisfactory to labor." In other words, it is fairly fair and reasonably reasonable! Is that an endorsement of this measure, Mr. Speaker? That is what I call "faint praise" of the very faintest ray serene. A number of the industrial chiefs composing the executive body of the American Federation of Labor are outspoken in condemnation of this measure, both as to purpose and in principle.

Why should organized labor support this proposition? It sets up a board and vests it with power to invade the province of organized labor—a board authorized and empowered to appropriate, or at least impinge the most effective and most sacred prerogative of organized labor—the right of collective bargaining.

Mr. Speaker, this is a labor measure in name only. It has the voice of Jacob but the hairy hand of Esau. On the surface it is a "whited sepulcher which indeed appears beautiful outward, but is within full of dead men's bones." Verily, so far as organized labor is concerned, it is a deception and a snare.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST THE SOUTH

Due to climatic, economic, and transportational handicaps and differentials, the passage of this measure will result in irreparable injury to southern labor and southern industry. By its very nature, the tariffs provided will operate to protect those areas of the country which are richest, longest organized industrially, and have the greater advantage in climate, railroad rates, and trained populations of workers. The board set up in this bill is empowered to fix wages and hours in all industries up to a certain level and bar from interstate commerce goods whose production standards do not conform. This board, vested with such extraordinary power, will inevitably be subjected to political pressure and lobbying, which in the past has been the curse of our foreign tariff policy.

It is manifest, my friends, that the authors of this bill, Messrs. Corcoran and Cohen, had this in mind when they drafted the measure. Senator LODGE let the cat out of the bag when he declared on the Senate floor a few days ago that if this measure is enacted there will be no more New England industries moving into the South. If this law will do what its northern proponents expect it to do, due to natural and artificial differentials, it will, in effect, prevent southern labor and industry competing in the national markets. The labor will either become unemployed or will be forced into those local industries, trades, and services which are not under Federal regulations. It is conceded that it costs from 15 to 30 percent more to live in the cities and industrial centers of the North than it does in the South, and yet we in the South live much better. This differential, however, must enter into the cost of production, because it is an economic equation that cannot be disregarded.

Mr. Speaker, I want to remind my southern colleagues that this bill cannot redound to the advantage of labor in our section. If southern industry is not able to meet northern and eastern competition, it will mean the closing down of factories and the increase of unemployment, the loss of taxable property and a general demoralization of industrial conditions in the southland.

UNLAWFUL RESTRICTIONS

This bill erects tariffs and trade barriers among the States in violation of the Constitution. The Constitution specifically forbids the creation of internal tariffs. And now we have a bill proposing that the Federal Government, under the guise of regulating labor conditions, set up regional tariffs which under the Constitution no State may establish for itself. This bill confers power on a board to ban from interstate commerce goods manufactured in their judgment under substandard conditions. While this bill undertakes to set up domestic standard hours and wages, no effort is made to bar goods manufactured by pauper labor abroad, and imported into the United States to be sold in competition with our own commodities. We shed crocodile tears over sweatshops and child labor in this country and overlook the importations of goods produced in foreign lands in sweatshops by child labor and sold here in competition with our own domestic production. With importations of coolie-made goods increasing daily, what will happen to American labor and industry if this bill becomes law is perfectly obvious. Foreign importations should be absolutely barred except on a showing that they were manufactured under conditions equal to our own, or a duty imposed sufficient to protect American industry and labor. One of the paradoxes of this proposal is found in the fact that the sponsor of the Senate bill voted against the N. R. A. on the ground that it was unconstitutional because of its unlawful delegation of power. Well, Mr. Speaker, for delegation of power and usurpation of private rights, this bill makes the N. R. A. pale into utter insignificance.

FRIENDS OF N. R. A. CONDEMN

Mr. Speaker, the advocates of this measure attempt to give it character by saying it is a reincarnation of the N. R. A. Of course, that is no recommendation to me. However, it might be of interest to cite the comments of certain Blue Eagle apostles on this measure. Gen. Hugh Johnson, generalissimo of the N. R. A., in referring to this bill recently said:

> It is no good. The administration knows it is no good. Bill Green knows it is no good, and said so. John Lewis has not committed himself. If proof were needed that Congress should recess or adjourn—
> Said the doughty general—
> this nightmare ought to provide it.

Donald R. Richberg, former N. R. A. Administrator, recently asserted in a formal statement that the Black-Connery bill—

> Invites a repetition of practically all of the errors of the N. R. A. in the matter of fixing and enforcing reasonable wages and hours, without providing some of the safeguards which were provided for the administration of the N. R. A.

Dr. Charles F. Roos, who was director of research for the N. R. A., declared a few days ago that the Black-Connery bill would "do more to lower the living standards than any panacea yet proposed." In a letter to Senator Hugo L. Black, one of the sponsors of the bill, he said the measure "can easily cause a half million people to lose their jobs within the first year of its operation." In his letter to Senator Black, Dr. Roos further said, "I cannot urge you too strongly that you forsake the bill that bears your name, lest your name go down in history as another Benedict Arnold." "As former director of research for the N. R. A.", said Dr. Roos, "I felt it necessary to write Senator Black to give him the benefit of the Government's experience in fixing hours and wages under the N. R. A., and the effect that this effort had upon production and employment."

Mr. Speaker, if the authorities I have cited above can find no virtue or merit in this measure, in the name of high heaven, how can anyone expect me or anyone else who is opposed to state socialism to support this legislation?

UN-AMERICAN METHODS OF ENFORCEMENT

The punitive provisions of the original Black-Connery bill are both interesting and amazing because they disclose the spirit which motivated the measure. The President is empowered through the board to punish a refractory employer, that is to say, if he does not obey the board's orders, by fines and imprisonment. The bill provides that each person who is employed at lower wages or longer hours than that decreed by the board shall "constitute a separate offense" punishable by a fine of not less than $500, or imprisonment for 6 months, or both. Therefore, if an employer pays to 100 persons lower wages than the board decrees, or works them over the hours designated, he may be sentenced to pay fines aggregating $50,000, and he may be sent to prison for a total of 50 years, or both. Under the language of this bill a large employer, such as Henry Ford, might be sent to jail for the better part of eternity. This bill also contemplates that members of the board shall be clairvoyants or mind readers. They are to determine whether any employer has "violated or is about to violate" any provision of the proposed law. On this point, I quote from an editorial appearing in the August 13 issue of the Knoxville News-Sentinel, which is apropos, and is as follows:

> Just how, we wonder, does a plain American citizen, by the mere act of being transformed into a bureaucrat attain the omniscience to determine whether anybody is "about to violate" any rule or law?

This is about what you would naturally expect from such crackpot, half-baked legislation.

HALF-BAKED PROPOSAL

Mr. Speaker, this measure has not had sufficient consideration. Think of it, a measure that will affect the welfare of practically every inhabitant of this land rushed through Congress with practically no research and with only scant and perfunctory consideration; a measure that not only affects labor and industry but the producer and consumer of practically every commodity he must buy or sell.

MOTIVE BEHIND IT

Mr. Speaker, there is an unsavory and sinister influence back of this bill. Somebody is trying to "railroad" this legislation for a selfish reason. Somebody is trying to "save his face." Somebody is seeking revenge and reprisal. Somebody is looking for a scapegoat. And I trust no one in this country is so stupid as not to know who that somebody is. In his desperation to "save his face" before Congress adjourns, he is willing to saddle upon the labor and industry of this country another bureaucracy to sap their lifeblood, bring about their enslavement, and utterly end in their unemployment and poverty.

I agree with Mr. Pinchot, that if we are going to pass without practical research and mature consideration such crackpot legislation as this, we might as well shut up shop and turn the Capitol into a national museum.

My friends, as further evidence of the scant and superficial consideration that was given to this far-reaching proposal when the House committee reported this bill, it contained provisions making it unlawful for women and minors to work from 12 o'clock midnight to 6 a. m. So far as I know, every State in the Union defines a "minor" as a person under 21 years of age. Therefore, had this bill passed with these provisions in it, no woman during those hours could work as a telephone operator or in any other capacity, and neither could a person under 21, even if he had a wife and two or three children. The fallacy of any such legislation is perfectly obvious.

The bill as reported to the House had another provision requiring payment of time and one-half to anyone working during the hours above mentioned. I am told that many workers prefer what is known as the third shift. In many industries this last provision would have simply had the effect to discontinue the third shift of operation, which would have thrown thousands of people out of employment. When the fallacy of these provisions was called to the attention of the Labor Committee of the House it reconvened and struck the provisions from the bill. The point I make, Mr. Speaker, is that this action of the Labor Committee shows conclusively that only perfunctory consideration was given to a measure which is intended to reform our entire economic structure.

CONSISTENT FRIEND OF LABOR

Mr. Speaker, I am just as much in favor of reasonable minimum-wage and maximum-hour legislation as any man in Congress, but I am unalterably opposed to the autocratic bureaucracy which this bill undertakes to set up. A minimum-wage and maximum-hour measure can be enacted, vesting its execution in the Department of Justice and the courts, as in other Federal statutes. Such an act would certainly be as constitutional as the bill before us, and both labor and industry would be safeguarded against the insolence and domination characteristic of bureaucracy.

Industry is entitled to a reasonable return on its investment and labor is entitled to a fair and living wage. Every reasonable person recognizes the soundness of this principle; and any legislation we pass ought to contemplate and preserve it. Let us not enact legislation calculated to hamstring industry and at the same time throttle the freedom and aspirations of labor.

Mr. Speaker, let there be peace and good will among the industrial groups and working classes of America. Let them realize that the one is indispensable to the other, and that their well-being depends upon their mutual accord and mutual cooperation. Let the spirit of the Golden Rule pervade and permeate the industrial atmosphere of our country. The persecution of the one by the other can only result in hardship, discord, misery, and calamity for both. [Applause.]

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] 5 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to present to the Members of the House this afternoon some of the facts surrounding the legislation now under consideration.

This legislation came to the Committee on Military Affairs shortly after the disaster to the Hindenburg on our eastern coast.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. HARTER. Does not the gentleman recall that the committee started hearings long before the loss of the Hindenburg, and the records of the committee will show this.

Mr. FADDIS. The gentleman is probably right and I stand corrected, but the burden of the testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs was to the effect that the desire to liberalize the sale of helium was in order that the Germans might secure the helium to develop lighter-than-air craft. There was no testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs that any American interest at the present time is prepared to go into the market and develop lighter-than-air craft. The entire burden of the testimony was to the effect that they desired the Germans to secure this helium in order that the Germans might go ahead and develop lighter-than-air craft and, in this way, American interests would be able to secure the trade secrets from the Germans. These are the facts, and they can be verified from the testimony before the committee.

I am not especially opposed to this piece of legislation because I do not believe that lighter-than-air craft has any great value as a matter of national defense to this Nation, but I am opposed to the legislation in its present form, because in its present form it is a subsidy to foreign interests and some special interests in the United States. I wish you would take the bill and turn to page 6 and notice the committee amendment there. In that committee amendment the cost of producing this helium and the cost upon which the sale of it will be based, includes 3½-percent interest charge on capital expended from now on. It gives no consideration whatever to the capital that has been expended in the past in prospecting for or developing or experimenting with processes to produce this helium. It provides for only an interest charge of 3½ percent on the investment yet to come, which is a smaller interest rate than the rate provided under the Home Owners' Loan plan and a less rate of interest than the veterans had to pay when they borrowed on their adjusted-service certificates.

I wish to state to the Members of the House that when the bill is being read under the 5-minute rule I intend to propose an amendment providing that the interest shall be calculated on the entire investment connected with the production of this helium and that the rate of interest shall be 5 percent. I see no reason why Germany, France, or England or any other foreign nation that owes the United States of America vast sums of money upon which they are not even paying the interest, should receive the advantage of a low rate of interest in the form of a subsidy from the United States Government, which subsidy will come from the pockets of the taxpayers. When this matter came before the Committee on Military Affairs there was a great deal of opposition to the bill, and as we went along the bill was amended and in most particulars these amendments took care of the objections of the members of this committee, but I want to leave this fact with the House: When the House bill 7494 was reported out, a minority report was drawn up and signed up by 10 members of the Committee on Military Affairs, 6 Democrats and 4 Republicans, in which they set forth their objections to certain features of the proposed legislation. Later on in the committee the amendments which had been put into the House bill were put into the Senate bill, and the Senate bill was substituted for the House bill. The minority report, however, was omitted from the report on the Senate bill.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. What amount does Germany owe the United States?

Mr. FADDIS. I could not begin to say that.

Mr. KELLER. Is it not true that Germany owes a comparatively small amount of money compared with England, France, and the other countries?

Mr. FADDIS. I do not care what the amount of the debt is; if she owes us $10 which she is not paying, why should we give her something in the form of a subsidy, or even if she owes us nothing.

Mr. KELLER. Have we been able to develop lighter-than-air craft successfully?

Mr. FADDIS. Perhaps, if we were forced to the necessity of doing so, we might be able to do it. We have just as skillful engineers in this country as they have in Germany. We have all the talent and the skill and the initiative and the industry that any nation in the world can produce, and if put to the necessity we could develop the lighter-than-air craft as well as any foreign nation on the face of the globe.

Mr. KELLER. Why have we made a failure every time we have tried to do so?

Mr. FADDIS. That is something I cannot answer. I am not an expert on lighter-than-air craft. If we have made a failure, in my opinion, it has been because we have relied too much on the trade secrets of Germany, and they have not told us these valuable trade secrets.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. WEARIN. Of course, right at this point, it should be recalled that no country has made an outstanding success in the construction of lighter-than-air craft; in fact, every country in the world has made a disastrous failure of it except Germany, and they have had the advantage of the genius of Count Hugo von Eckener who, in a sense, is a Thomas A. Edison in this field; and every nation does not have that kind of genius for the development of some particular project.

Mr. FADDIS. I thank the gentleman, but that has nothing to do with the merits of the bill under consideration.

There is one more point I wish to leave with the membership of the House. It is not necessary we should sell any of this helium to any foreign nation in order to permit these lighter-than-air ships to cross the ocean, because it was brought out in the testimony before the committee that you can adulterate helium with 15 percent of nitrogen and it is still safe. Therefore, as far as that is concerned, if they are going to operate lines with lighter-than-air ships between this country and some foreign country, let us sell them helium to inflate their ships in this country, and if there has been any attrition in the helium contained in the ships when they reach the other side, and it is necessary to replace it, they can replace it with 15 percent of hydrogen and the mixture is still safe. Then, when the ship comes back here, they can refill it with helium. There is no actual necessity to sell this helium to any foreign nation in order to encourage this industry.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. And helium is very expensive for treatment in medical cases or for scientific purposes. Is not that right?

Mr. FADDIS. That is true.

Mr. SABATH. But only a very few people in America can afford to obtain the helium treatment. Why should we then sell it for killing purposes instead of leaving it here in this country for the purpose of healing?

Mr. FADDIS. As far as that is concerned, there is no idea of selling this helium for purposes of killing people. There is every provision made about allowing its use for medical purposes. I say that in all fairness to the legislation, although I am opposed to it.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Does the gentleman have any figures as to the amount this Nation has invested in the past in large property holdings in Texas, as bearing on the question of the price for this helium?

Mr. FADDIS. I attempted to obtain those figures from the Bureau of Mines, but was told that they closed at half past 3 o'clock, and I was unable to obtain it; but the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SUTPHIN] suggested an amount of approximately $9,000,000.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. MAY. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Maryland——

Mr. FADDIS. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have answered the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MAY. The Government does have invested, as I understand it, in gas-bearing land such a sum of money that if it were taken into consideration it would probably make the cost of this stuff prohibitive.

Mr. FADDIS. I do not believe that is true and can see no justification for any subsidy under any consideration.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the Rules Committee, for whom I have the highest regard, would have rendered a better service to the country and the people if they had considered the resolution to investigate subversive and un-American activities with regard to nazi-ism and other "isms" in this country. I have no complaint against the German Government; I am not quarreling with Mr. Hitler and his activities in Germany, but I am in this country, and if the Committee on Military Affairs, knowing that I have made a thorough study of this situation, had called on me for information I could have given them enough information to have caused them to prevent their recommending this bill. I might also have advised the Rules Committee, that was at such considerable pains to vote this marvelous piece of legislation out, that at the present time there are Hitler agents and spies who are here against our form of government. This bill has been well lobbied and financed by German money. Italy has not asked for helium. It is Germany who has asked for helium, and what we would have to do is to buy out other plants with American money and we would have to put in this another million dollars, and then sell the helium to Germany without a penny of profit. I think it is about time this country woke up. I tell you right now that something is going to happen between now and the next Congress, or the next session, in regard to un-American activities, because of its laxity in its performance of its duty to this country.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? How does the gentleman know that German money has been used on this subject?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I wish I had the time, and I could give the gentleman the figures.

Mr. KELLER. I heard the gentleman talk about giving figures before, but he never did tell us.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. In regard to the matter of relationship between the Nazi government and this bill before us, the vice president of the American Zeppelin Co. is a man named Wiley von Meister. He is also the representative of the Deutsches Zeppelin Co.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. He is also the liaison man of the Nazi government with certain industrial concerns in this country, and I shall bring up definite proof later on that the Nazi government is more behind this bill than any other source in the world.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If I had had the time I would have been able to get 250 signatures to a petition to discharge the Rules Committee, but time does not permit, and I was willing only yesterday to give all the facts to any committee that may be appointed to make that study. Boake Carter is the real German agent in the United States working for H. von Boeckmann, who in turn represents German broadcasting in the United States. He has furnished Boake Carter with material with regard to the lobbying of this helium bill that was brought out in the other body without even careful study and consideration.

I say to you right now that our Government is going to sell helium to Germany. I have no quarrel with that, but Germany today and the whole of Europe is on the threshold of a war. Are we, as Members of this body, going to aid and assist the enemies of peace? I say to you I would give them all the helium they want if I knew it was for honest, legitimate purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I think a great many of the Members who have spoken, particularly those from the Rules Committee, do not understand the situation having to do with this bill. In the first place, let me say to those uninformed that the Government today owns 85 percent of the helium-production property, and is in a position to produce 85 percent of the helium in this country. The Government is operating in the production of helium, under the provisions of the Helium Act passed in 1927, and it is now out of date. There is only one private company in the country, which controls 15 percent of the production. There are, I think, some indications that the private company was incited to go into the helium business through officials of the Navy Department. This private company today is practically out of business insofar as helium is concerned, because of Government competition. It has been to a large extent put out of business through the fact that the Government naturally is able to undersell the private company. I do not believe in monopolies, but it was apparent to me as soon as these hearings started that the Government already has a monopoly, and there is no way of stopping the monopoly.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. No; I do not yield at this time. The Government has, in effect, put the private company out of business. If they purchase it, as they wish to do, without the provisions of this act, they would purchase it as you would purchase something sold under the hammer.

I was one of those who signed the original minority report because of what to me seemed three essential features lacking in the bill. One was that there were not sufficiently strong restrictions insofar as exportation was concerned. Secondly, that there was no provision to retire the private company on any reasonable sort of a basis, as any businessman would do. Third, there was no provision for the Government to charge interest on its investment for the benefit of the taxpayers. Since the favorable report on the original bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which I objected, the Senate has passed a bill that brought in all three features which I felt the bill should include, with the addition of some further strengthening amendments to the Senate bill by the House committee. I say to the people who are opposing this bill today on the ground that it has something to do with Germany, please read the committee report and the proposed bill. Then read the Helium Act of 1927—the present law. Under the present provisions of the Helium Act of 1927, it is easier for this Government to export helium to Germany than it would be after the passage of the bill which we are offering today. All necessary to convince you is a comparison of the proposed measure with the act of 1927. If you do not want to export to Germany, then bring in another bill repealing the existing Helium Act.

Under present law helium may be exported for any use upon the approval of the President after joint recommendations of the Secretaries of War, Navy, and Interior.

Under the proposed legislation no helium may be exported except upon the joint approval of all members of the National Munitions Control Board and the Secretary of the Interior. The bill provides that export regulations shall prohibit the accumulation of helium in quantities of military importance in any foreign country and also prohibits the exportation of helium to countries named in proclamations of the President issued pursuant to the Neutrality Act of May 1, 1937—i. e., to any country in which the President declares a state of war to exist. (See H. R. 7494, p. 6, lines 12–22, inclusive.)

Officials of the Army and Navy, including the Chief of the Air Corps of the United States Army, testified before your committee that the provisions of the bill, in their judgment, will provide adequate safeguards against the accumulation of sufficient quantities of helium abroad to be of military importance. It is expected that under the drastic provisions covering exportation of helium contained in the bill that shipment abroad will be permitted only in such quantities as are necessary to replenish constant losses of the gas incurred in operations and to properly maintain airships operating in our foreign trade.

If the committee amendments are adopted helium may be sold for the inflation of only such foreign airships as operate between the United States and its Territories and foreign countries. This country will thus be included in all international air routes traversed by airships using helium gas. Under such an arrangement the United States will serve as a helium filling station. This procedure will have the effect of reducing to an absolute minimum the quantities of helium necessary to be exported abroad. The quantities which will need to be exported for medical and scientific uses and for the periodic replenishment of operating losses for airships receiving their main supply in the United States will in no case assume military proportions. The committee also believes that high transportation and storage costs will, in themselves, be effective barriers against the exportation of large volumes of helium.

The exportation of helium as authorized by the bill is consistent with our good-neighbor policy and will do much to promote international good will by making helium available for the alleviation of human suffering and scientific research and by stimulating air commerce between the United States and foreign countries.

To those who express opposition to this bill, I say I do not believe you are really sincere in your opposition, no matter what your opinion may be of Germany or the Nazis or any other basis, for if you really want to make the exportation more difficult you will vote for this bill. If you will read the provisions of the Helium Act, under which we are operating today, you will see it is much easier to export helum than it would be under this bill as amended. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, in the short time I have I will not be able to yield. I merely want to make a short statement of my position on this rule and bill. I am for the rule because I think we need to make helium available for medical purposes, and I think we should make it more easily available for commercial use in this country, but I am against the bill in its present form, and I intend to offer an amendment which would restrict the sale for airship purposes to such airships as are owned by the citizens of the United States.

If we could properly safeguard the use of helium by foreign countries so that it could not be used for military purposes, and if we had no subsidies in our legislation to the foreign countries, I would have no objection to sale to them, but it is my opinion that it is impossible to prevent the use of helium which is sent over there, no matter to what country, for military purposes. The gas sufficient to inflate a ship like the Hindenburg would inflate more than 100 observation balloons and would give the country which had that gas some advantage over any opponent which had only hydrogen. It would be safer to use in its observation balloons, for one item. It is not of tremendous importance as a military item, but it has several uses, such as that for observation balloons, and also for long-distance scouting. [Applause.]

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, 9 minutes, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Speaker, I only wish there were more time at my command so that I might have an opportunity of going through this bill, section by section, so that the Members would be familiar with just what is in the bill.

I may say with reference to the arguments that have been made by those opposed to the bill this afternoon that they know not what they do. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, this bill is no recent proposal to this Congress, for on the 1st day of February of this year the Secretary of the Interior recommended to Congress changes in the present helium law. The Helium Act under which we are operating at the present time was passed in 1927. Under it helium is leased, not sold. Helium is dissipated and lost no matter how it is stored, so it is very desirable to provide means for the sale of helium rather than for the leasing of helium.

After that proposal was made to the Congress by the Secretary of the Interior the President asked five members of his Cabinet to investigate with reference to the adoption of a policy which would make helium available from the Government-controlled producing plant for medicinal purposes and for scientific and commercial purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARTER. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that when Dr. Eckener was here he made the statement in one of his last speeches that the primary use of helium was for war purposes?

Mr. HARTER. I do not remember his making any such statement.

Mr. SNELL. I think he so stated in one of his last public speeches.

Mr. HARTER. When he appeared before our committee he explicitly said that he did not consider helium of military importance in Europe, that heavier-than-air had been developed to such extent, that lighter-than-air is such a vulnerable target, and with the far greater speed of the airplane that he considers lighter-than-air of no value whatsoever from the standpoint of military use to European nations; he did say that airships no doubt would be of value to the United States as naval scouts by reason of our geographical position.

Mr. SNELL. In his last public statement he said that it was useful primarily for military purposes.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. I yield.

Mr. DORSEY. When Dr. Eckener was before our committee did he not say that during the World War it was his experience that lighter-than-air ships were absolutely ineffective and that after the first 2 years of the war they practically gave up using them?

Mr. HARTER. I thank the gentleman for the contribution. It is a fact that the Germans lost most of the airships they used for military purposes during the World War through being shot down, and we know how much more effective airplanes and antiaircraft artillery are today than they were at the time of the World War.

The high officials of the Army and the Navy appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and of the Senate. Both of these committees held very extensive hearings upon this bill. The military authorities of this country interested in our national defense informed us that the provisions of this bill were absolutely adequate to protect this country as far as any exportation of helium is concerned. The export provisions of the bill will prevent the acquisition abroad of sufficient helium to be of military value.

I might address myself to the medicinal use of helium, but I shall not take the time for this. I know that all of you are interested in the humanitarian side of the use of helium and wish to make it available to the medical profession.

Let me point out to those who claim we are doing this for Germany, for foreign nations, that such is not the fact. We are desirous of instituting an American program for the building of airships in this country. Under a law enacted by Congress last year the Maritime Commission of this country is given authority to investigate the feasibility of lighter-than-air craft in connection with our foreign commerce. One of our American companies at the present time has negotiations under way with the Maritime Commission discussing the possibility of constructing two American-built ships. Let me point out the strides that are being made in aviation in the world today and now, if we can make helium available for commercial uses at a reasonable price it will assist in the development of lighter-than-air craft construction in the United States. We know that interests in this country, together with interests in Great Britain, are conducting an airplane service between New York and Bermuda and that a line is being projected from this country across the Atlantic to England. This is not being done as a United States venture but as a joint enterprise with Great Britain. Why? Because we have to obtain landing rights in England. England, likewise, wants landing rights and refueling rights in this country. So Pan American and British Imperial Airways are cooperating in these services.

The value of lighter-than-air craft establishes itself not so much in short-distance flights as in long-distance transoceanic flights. It takes our modern aircraft, our Pan-American clipper, longer to make the trans-Pacific flight than it did the Graf Zeppelin several years ago.

Why? Because the airplane only travels part of each 24 hours and only during favorable weather, while the lighter-than-air ship travels the entire 24 hours.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Is it not a fact that there is a continuous loss of helium by its use in an airship?

Mr. HARTER. That is true.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Therefore it could never be used for military purposes?

Mr. HARTER. Under the provisions of an amendment which will be offered to this bill, a very minimum amount of helium will be shipped abroad. Only sufficient for replenishment of that lost in flight is contemplated. It is expensive to ship because it has to be sent in metal containers. Under the provisions of the amendment, only those airships which ply between this country and its territories and possessions or between this country and its territories and foreign countries may have this helium. That means in each instance a ship of foreign registry will have to in any trip it makes call at the United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman know what proportion of the helium produced in the United States finds its way into use for medicinal purposes and into military or aviation uses?

Mr. HARTER. There is a very small amount used for medicinal purposes, but there is a constantly increasing amount being used for that purpose, because it has been found to be very beneficial in the treatment of asthma and other respiratory diseases.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The demand exceeds the supply?

Mr. HARTER. At the present cost. The cost is so prohibitive that people of moderate means have difficulty using it for treatment of their ailments.

Additional medical and scientific uses are being found for helium. The Federal Aviation Commission, in its report dated January 22, 1935, stated that "the Helium Act needs revision, since it is based upon premises no longer tenable and sets up an unwieldy procedure." The Government owns a production plant of large capacity and high operating economy which is used to supply current military needs and is conditioned for intensive wartime production. The Government is the world's only low-cost producer of helium, and at the present time is the largest consumer. The capacity of the Government plant is ample to supply the present commercial market as well as the peacetime requirements of the Army and Navy. Capacity at present is 24,000,000 cubic feet per year. The only private commercial producer serves a limited market, and his production costs have been considerable and his market price high. His usual charge for medicinal use has been $125 per 1,000 cubic feet, to which must be added a considerable amount covering shipment in metal containers. High prices have been an effective barrier to a wide utilization of helium in medical and aeronautical fields.

The President, under date of May 25, wrote to Chairman HILL, of the House Military Affairs Committee, stating that he had requested the Secretaries of State, War, Navy, the Interior, and Commerce to formulate a policy for the sale and exportation of helium gas. A copy of their recommendations was enclosed by the President. His letter concluded with these words:

> In my judgment, these recommendations express a sound national policy.

The bill which we are considering has the approval of the five secretaries who made the recommendation for a modernization of our helium policy to the President. The House Military Affairs Committee held extensive hearings upon the original House bill, H. R. 4415, introduced by Chairman HILL. These hearings were conducted for a period of more than 2 months, being concluded on July 1, 1937. As a result of hearings before your committee and the Senate Military Affairs Committee, revised bills were drafted known as H. R. 7494 and S. 1567. Upon the passage of S. 1567 by the Senate, the House committee met, considered the bill as passed by the Senate, and has favorably recommended it for passage to the House with certain amendments.

The bill is not long and perhaps its provisions can best be described to the House by stating briefly the contents and purposes of the five sections of the bill.

Section 1 authorizes the Bureau of Mines to acquire the necessary lands, or interests therein, needed for the production or conservation of helium to meet the needs of the Army and Navy and other agencies of the Federal Government. Under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is directed to acquire the property of the private corporation engaged in the production of helium, the purchase to be at a price, or prices, recommended to be fair and reasonable by at least two of a board of three appraisers—one to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, one by the owner of the property sought to be acquired, and one by the two appraisers so selected. Inasmuch as a representative of the Girdler Corporation, the only private producer, in testifying before your committee, offered to sell its properties for approximately $600,000, it will be noted that the cost of making helium production a Government monopoly will not be excessive. It is believed that an appraisal board will find the privately owned property is worth considerably less than $600,000.

Section 2 authorizes the Bureau of Mines, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to maintain and operate helium production and repurification plants; to store and care for helium; to conduct exploration for and production of helium on lands acquired; and conduct experimentation and research for the purpose of discovering helium supplies and improving processes and methods of helium production, repurification, storage, and utilization.

Section 3 is a redraft of section 3 of the old law incorporating changes to conform to the policy recommended by a letter of May 21, 1937, to the President, signed by the Secretaries of Interior, State, War, Navy, and Commerce—

> That the Government should be authorized to make both domestic and export sales for operation of commercial lighter-than-air craft plying between the United States and other countries, and for medicinal, scientific, and commercial uses.

This section, in part, authorizes the Army and Navy and other agencies of the Federal Government to request helium from the Bureau of Mines and to make payments therefor from any applicable appropriations. Subsection (b) provides that helium not needed for Government use may be produced and sold upon payment in advance in quantities and under regulations approved by the President, for medical, scientific, and commercial use. This is a change from the existing law. The present law provides that surplus helium, until needed for Government use, may be leased under regulations approved by the President.

Apparently the purpose of providing for the leasing only of helium was to make any helium in the possession of commercial users available to the United States Government in time of need. The Department of the Interior advises that the leasing of a commodity that is dissipated in use, such as helium, brings troublesome questions of interpretation. Section 3 of S. 1567 is designed to change the Government's power to lease helium gas to the power to sell it. The proposed legislation provides that all sales shall be upon condition that the Federal Government shall have a right to repurchase the helium so sold that has not been lost or dissipated when it is needed for Government use. The first amendment proposed by your House committee appears in this subsection (b) of section 3, your committee recommending the striking out of the phrase "including inflation of passenger-carrying airships", found in lines 18 and 19 of page 5 of the bill, and insertion in lieu thereof of this language:

> Except that helium may be sold for the inflation of only such airships as operate in or between the United States and its Territories and possessions, or between the United States or its Territories and possessions and foreign countries.

This amendment will restrict the sale of helium to the inflation of airships which operate in or between the United States and its Territories and possessions, or between the United States or its Territories and possessions and foreign countries. It would prohibit the sale of helium for the inflation of airships flying between one country and another. This subsection (b) of section 3 also relates to the prices to be charged for the helium sold under the policy referred to. You will note that while sales of helium shall be at reasonable prices, they are to be based upon the cost of acquiring, developing, maintaining, and operating the Government properties.

This language will include charges for depreciation, depletion, and other elements that represent a return of the capital investment—cost of acquirement and development—during the life of the property. Your House committee proposes two amendments to this portion of subsection (b) of section 3, which will be found in lines 1 to 9, inclusive, on page 6. The first amendment provides that the commercial user shall pay interest at a rate of not less than 3½ percent per annum on capital hereafter expended for properties, facilities, and helium-bearing gas lands; and the further amendment provides that notwithstanding the provisions as to prices to be charged, that helium shall be sold for medicinal purposes at prices which will permit its general use therefor. Subsection (c) of section 3 relates to the crediting of money to be received from the sales of helium and other products of helium operation. It joins the multiplicity of fund accounts which are provided under the present law.

Section 4 of the act of March 3, 1927, prohibits exportation of helium except with permission of the President on the joint recommendation of three Secretaries, but it contains no indication of policy to guide the President and the Secretaries in controlling exports. The letter of May 21, 1927, from the five Secretaries to the President—which was endorsed by the President—announced the policy that exports of helium should be surrounded with safeguards that will prevent the use of helium by foreign countries for military purposes.

In the hearings on S. 1567 and H. R. 7494, attention was called to the National Munitions Control Board, composed of the Secretaries of State, the Treasury, War, the Navy, and Commerce, established under Public Resolution 67, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 31, 1935; also to the Provisions of the Neutrality Act of May 1, 1937 (Public Resolution No. 27, 75th Cong.). The view was expressed that legislation and administrative procedure relative to exportation of helium should be coordinated with that relative to munitions. This section contains these safeguards.

The first part of section 4 places control of exportation of helium in the National Munitions Control Board (Secretaries of State, the Treasury, War, the Navy, and Commerce) and the Secretary of the Interior. The routine of administration of the section will be in the Department of State. The Munitions Control Board will have the information necessary as a basis for considering exports from the standpoint of national defense; and the Secretary of the Interior, who will have charge of helium production, will have the information necessary for considering such exports from the standpoint of domestic supplies and conservation of helium.

A guide for administration of the section is set up by stating that regulations governing exports of helium shall not permit accumulations of helium of military importance in foreign countries, nor exports of helium to countries named in proclamations of the President issued pursuant to the Neutrality Act of May 1, 1937.

Under section 4 of S. 1567, exporters are required to submit a sworn statement showing the quantity, designation, consignee, and intended use of each proposed exportation. The House committee in reporting favorably S. 1567 recommends an amendment to section 4 which would restore the original language of S. 1567 and the companion House bill, H. R. 7494. This will be found on page 7, lines 14, 15, and 16, providing that the license authorizing exportation shall be obtained from the Secretary of State on the joint recommendation of all of the members of the National Munitions Control Board and the Secretary of the Interior. It would seem far preferable to put the control of licensing for exportation in the hands of the Munitions Control Board and the Secretary of the Interior rather than in the Secretary of State and the President. The Secretaries charged with national defense, namely, the Secretaries of War and Navy, are members of the Munitions Control Board.

Both the War and Navy Departments have approved this bill. In this connection I wish to read part of the testimony of General Westover, Chief of the Army Air Corps, and of Commander Rosendahl of the Navy:

Mr. FADDIS. I would just like to hear some real good reason why we should encourage foreign nations to develop lighter-than-air craft. Are we not competent to do it? Do we not have the skill and the ability within our own Nation to do it?

General WESTOVER. When it comes to that, I am very glad to give you my view. We have demonstrated, in my opinion, in this country that we have the engineers and the engineering ability to design proper airships. I think that we have demonstrated that we have the mechanical and engineering ability to properly construct them, and to fit them out with the equipment that will make them function either as military or commercial agencies. I know that we have the personnel that can fly these airships and that we can train and trust to operate them properly. But we have one missing link there, where one foreign nation has the advantage, and that is the results of accumulated experience in the operation of airships, and there is no way under the sun that I know of that we can bridge that gap, of getting that experience, unless we have the airships, train in them, fly in them, and work with them all the time just as we are doing with our General Headquarters Air Force right along.

Mr. FADDIS. And right there we encourage more development abroad, and that gap is continually going to get wider, is it not?

General WESTOVER. I do not think so, for this reason——

Mr. FADDIS. It has in the past, has it not?

General WESTOVER. Well, I did not contemplate that our Government was simply going to foster foreign commercial aviation development to the exclusion of our own. I presume that our Department of State or our Department of Commerce will work for reciprocal agreements to limit the amount of airship operation on both sides, just as we have tried to do with the trans-Atlantic plane service.

With regard to some of the matters you mentioned that the committee was interested in, in my testimony before the Senate committee, I stated my belief that this country should contribute to the development of commercial-airship operations by making helium commercially available, and that it should also contribute to the human elements by making helium available for medical purposes.

In view of the fact that this country is the only country possessing this important element of national defense, we could probably very well be restrictive, as we have in the past, in its use. In my opinion, however, the amount of helium that we would require for national defense for our own purposes is so small relatively, and the amount in reserve in this country is so great and available over such a period of years, that we would encounter no hazard in the consideration of its exportation for the two purposes that I mentioned.

I think it is easy to govern the use of this exported helium solely for commercial purposes, and if we maintain control of the source of supply and watch the beacon lights and signs of international trouble we should be able to know when to clamp down the lid of exportation, and this bill provides the means for Executive or other direction for terminating the exportation thereof, on proper cause, of course.

Mr. MAY. Why cannot American genius utilize that without having to sell the gas to get the benefit of it?

Commander ROSENDAHL. Well, there are a lot of things besides materials. In the first place, the Germans have their own airships operating at present; they may have, of course, made some mistakes, but they are very good operators and they have had airships operating to South America for some 7 or 8 years, very successfully. I think having that background all made available to us for merely letting them share what we have in the way of helium quantity is a very cheap price.

Now, as to the exportation of helium, I feel that we should permit the exportation under regulations which will insure that it will not be used for military purposes against us, and I think that that can be done very effectively. I do not see any obstacle in the way of control of such export, and my feeling is that by permitting the exportation of helium for commercial purposes—and for these other purposes, humanitarian and scientific—we are increasing the production of helium, which, of course, reduces the unit cost so that our own helium users will also benefit thereby from the resultant lower cost.

So just in a few brief words, it is my feeling that with this great abundance of helium that we have in this country, that can be produced almost without limit so far as we know, we could certainly afford to share it with other countries under reasonable regulations and restrictions.

Mr. HARTER. You do not feel that such operations would tend to build up a sufficient reserve of helium abroad to make it possible for them to use it in any very large measure for operations against this Nation or any other nation in the event of a war?

Commander ROSENTHAL. No; I think we can control that very effectively.

Another amendment will be offered to strike out all of the language in line 8, page 8, following the period, and all of lines 9, 10, 11, and 12. This would require the National Munitions Control Board to report on January 1 and July 1 of each year all sales of exported helium. This is in conflict with the language on the same page, lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, and the first two lines of page 9, directing the Munitions Control Board to include in its annual report to the Congress full information concerning the licenses issued. Inasmuch as the Board makes annual reports to the Congress on the export of all articles which may be termed "munitions of war" and over which it has jurisdiction, it would appear to be costly and unnecessary to have a report made twice annually in the case of helium only.

The remainder of section 4 contains the penalties for the violation of any of the provisions of the act.

Section 5 further safeguards the administration of this act by providing that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may each designate representatives to cooperate with the Department of the Interior in carrying out the purpose of this act, and shall have complete right of access to plants, data, and accounts.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on agreeing to the resolution and ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, arrangement has been made that after the previous question has been disposed of we will postpone further discussion of this bill until tomorrow morning, if that is agreeable.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We will have a vote on the rule?

Mr. HARLAN. We are going to have a vote on the rule now.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on agreeing to the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DICKSTEIN and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 153, noes 57.

So the resolution was agreed to.

HARRY BRYAN AND ALDA DUFFIELD MULLINS

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 1640) for the relief of Harry Bryan and Alda Duffield Mullins, and others.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1640) entitled "An Act for the relief of Harry Bryan and Alda Duffield Mullins, and others", having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, and 5.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
FRANCIS CASE,
JOHN M. COFFEE,
Managers on the part of the House.

M. M. LOGAN,
L. B. SCHWELLENBACH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1640) for the relief of Harry Bryan and Alda Duffield Mullins, and others, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

This bill involves 17 claims for personal injuries and death resulting from the negligence of employees of the United States, which negligence is conceded by the Works Progress Administration. Fifteen of the people involved are children and two adults. They were killed or injured by reason of an explosion of hot tar. The House Claims Committee when reporting the Senate bill raised two of the amounts, namely, "To the legal guardian of Patricia Lea Hitchcock, the sum of $1,000 instead of $500", and "To the legal guardian of Charles Ray Coulter, the sum of $4,000 instead of $2,000." However, on the floor of the House, three of the amounts involved in the bill were objected to as seeming to be excessive, and the following "floor" amendments were made: "To the legal guardian of Elbert Grover Harrison, Jr., the sum of $8,500 instead of $11,000", "To the legal guardian of Harry Robert Isenhart, the sum of $8,000 instead of $10,000", and "To the legal guardian of James Andrews Belknap, the sum of $500 instead of $1,000."

The objectors on the part of the House were spoken to after the bill had been amended, and it is believed that their objections have now been satisfied. Photographs showing the extent of the burns received by the children will prove clearly to anyone in doubt that no amount of money is sufficient compensation, and that certainly the amounts as reported by the House committee are justified. The conferees on the part of both the House and Senate agreed to this, and the accompanying conference report re-establishes the amounts as reported by the House committee.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
JOHN M. COFFEE,
FRANCIS CASE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Warner, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The Senate passed this bill awarding the claimant $5,000 for the death of her husband, a former United States deputy marshal, who is alleged to have died from injuries sustained in line of duty. The bill was amended in the House committee to authorize the claimant to present her claim to the Employees' Compensation Commission, where she will be allowed any compensation which may be found to be due her in accordance with the law governing similar cases.

The House amendment is the proper procedure, and the Senate conferees receded from their disagreement to same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
JOHN M. COFFEE,
FRANCIS CASE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LUCILLE M'CLURE

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 707) for the relief of Lucille McClure.

FLORIDA O. M'LAIN

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2229) for the relief of Florida O. McLain, widow of Calvin E. McLain.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2229) entitled "An act for the relief of Florida O. McLain, widow of Calvin E. McLain", having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
FRANCIS CASE,
JOHN M. COFFEE,
Managers on the part of the House.

JAMES H. HUGHES,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2229) for the relief of Florida O. McLain, widow of Calvin E. McLain, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The House passed this bill in the amount of $5,000, the usual amount allowed in death cases. However, the Senate reduced this amount to $2,500. The Senate also amended the bill to make the payment come out of the money appropriated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps. This is proper and is a procedure adopted by both the House and Senate Claims Committees since the bill in question was reported by the House.

At the conference, the Senate conferees receded from the disagreement to the $5,000 payment, and the House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment to take the money out of the C. C. C. appropriation.

JOHN M. COFFEE,
FRANCIS H. CASE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MAY. We have had two bills in the House. The House first passed a bill that went to the Senate and the House bill was stricken out and a Senate amendment inserted, which was known as the Copeland bill. Then the House Committee on Military Affairs reconsidered the matter and amended the Senate amendment or modified it in many respects.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has filed a conference report. Has the gentleman from Kentucky the original papers in the case? The only papers available are copies of the conference report and the official papers do not seem to have been returned from the Senate.

But the Chair cannot permit the consideration of a conference report on a bill while the original papers are in the possession of the other body, which seems to be the case in this instance. FEES IN BANKRUPTCY, RECEIVERSHIP, OR REORGANIZATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2849) to prohibit certain agreements fixing fees or compensation in receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization proceedings with an amendment amending the title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do this to ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I make this reservation of objection not because I am in any way opposed to this bill but this is the best way for me to gain the floor for a few minutes to discuss this important measure. I am now and for years have been in favor of a measure of this kind.

There is no doubt but that the fees and charges made and allowed in bankruptcy and receivership cases in the United States courts are outrageously high and unreasonable. This unreasonableness has often given rise to suspicion. In practically every impeachment case of United States judges that has come up before us for decision has brought out open charges or insinuations of collusion between parties in litigation or between the attorney and the court. As a practicing attorney, with considerable experience in practice in the United States courts, I have found our courts very capable and very strict as to fees and charges. But there is no question that there have been many abuses in the courts in the large metropolitan centers of the country.

As proof of my sincerity in favor of this measure I need only cite the fact that I introduced a bill in this session of Congress which is to all intents and purposes the same as this bill which was introduced by Senator BORAH. I have made some investigations as to the fees and charges made in some of these large bankruptcies in New York. I have a partial report of the fees in one case, which list I shall add to my remarks. These figures are only for the first settlement. No doubt the allowances will be as large in the final settlement, and the chances are that the charges will be twice as much. When you consider that this estate has only paid about 15 percent in dividends on the first class A bonds, and these bonds are only quoted at 16 on the hundred on the stock market, you can easily see that the second-class bondholders and the stockholders will not get a cent. The court costs will nearly equal the amount distributed to the first-class bondholders. The following list explains eloquently what I am trying to say:

Previous allowances paid:
Rosenberg, Goldmark & Colin:
As attorneys for receiver	$35,000.00
Disbursements	1,485.65

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) it shall be unlawful for any party in interest, or any attorney for any party in interest, in any receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization proceeding, in or under the supervision of any court of the United States, to enter into any agreement, written or oral, express or implied, with any other party in interest, or any attorney of any other party in interest, in such proceeding for the purpose of fixing the amount of the fees or other compensation to be paid to any party in interest or any attorney of any party in interest in such proceeding, for services rendered in connection therewith when such fees or other compensation are to be paid from the assets of the estate in receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization. As used in this section, the term "party in interest" includes any debtor, creditor, receiver, or trustee, and any representative of any of them.

(b) It shall be unlawful for the judge of any court of the United States to approve the payment of any fees or compensation the amount of which is fixed as the result of any act declared to be unlawful by subsection (a) of this section.

AMENDING SECTION 22 OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, with the understanding that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] no longer has objection, for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2619) to amend paragraph (1) of section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill has a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, and is urgently recommended by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I have no objection to it, but I think the gentleman from Indiana might well very briefly explain the bill.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I will boil this down to a couple of sentences. Under existing law the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to permit railroads to give reduced freight rates in serving sections of the country affected by flood or drought, moving cattle out or feed in, or otherwise; but under existing law if the railroads do that they become liable to lawsuits on the part of other parties on the ground that they have given an unlawful discrimination in rates, and judgments have been secured against railroads on account of that. It is for the purpose of correcting this situation so that the railroads may be able to comply with requests of the Department of Agriculture or other agencies of the Federal Government to serve drought or flood sections of the country without being subject to lawsuits or claims for damages on the grounds of unlawful discrimination.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Either the Federal or the State Government has to file a statement that the party to whom the goods are shipped is in distress before the law applies.

Mr. PETTENGILL. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of paragraph (1) of section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, as reads as follows: "Nothing in this part shall prevent any carrier or carriers subject to this part from giving reduced rates for the transportation of property to or from any section of the country with the object of providing relief in case of earthquake, flood, fire, famine, drought, epidemic, pestilence, or other calamitous visitation or disaster, if such reduced rates have first been authorized by order of the Commission (with or without a hearing); but in any such order the Commission shall define such section and shall specify the period during which such reduced rates are to remain in effect", is amended to read as follows: "Nothing in this part shall prevent any carrier or carriers subject to this part from giving reduced rates for the transportation of property to or from any section of the country with the object of providing relief in case of earthquake, flood, fire, famine, drought, epidemic, pestilence, or other calamitous visitation or disaster, if such reduced rates have first been authorized by order of the Commission (with or without a hearing); but in any such order the Commission shall (1) define such section, (2) specify the period during which such reduced rates are to remain in effect, and (3) clearly define the class or classes of persons entitled to such reduced rates: Provided, That any such order may define the class or classes entitled to such reduced rates as being persons designated as being in distress and in need of relief by agents of the United States or any State authorized to assist in relieving the distress caused by any such calamitous visitation or disaster. No carrier subject to the provisions of this part shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of such part with respect to undue or unreasonable preference or unjust discrimination by reason of the fact that such carrier extends such reduced rates only to the class or classes of persons defined in the order of the Commission authorizing such reduced rates."

FORT DONELSON NATIONAL MILITARY PARK, TENN.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2026, to provide for the addition of certain lands to the Fort Donelson National Military Park in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described tracts or parcels of land lying and being within the seventh civil district of Stewart County, Tenn., are hereby transferred from the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior as additions to the Fort Donelson National Military Park, and shall hereafter be subject to all laws and rules and regulations applicable to said park:

THREE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY, FIRST PERMANENT SETTLEMENT IN DELAWARE RIVER VALLEY

The Clerk called Senate Joint Resolution 135, to amend the public resolution approved June 5, 1936, entitled "Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government of Sweden and individuals an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the first permanent settlement in the Delaware River Valley, and for other purposes."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, Mr. HOLMES, Mr. RICH, Mr. SHORT, and Mr. CARLSON objected.

TRANSPORTING STOLEN ANIMALS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1375, to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I sincerely hope the gentleman will not insist on this objection. This is a matter of the utmost importance to the States in the Southwest. This matter of stealing livestock and chickens is getting to be a tremendous racket in our part of the country and is practically ruining and destroying many of our small farmers. Trucks in international travel back up to a chicken yard and take hundreds and hundreds of chickens out of a flock, and may take all the chickens a farmer has. The same thing happens in the case of cattle, mules, and hogs. This is a matter which should be under the protection of the Federal court. The problem is much larger than it sounds. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his request that the bill be passed over.

Mr. McCORMACK. I recognize the power of the gentleman's eloquence.

Mr. NICHOLS. It is not a matter of eloquence; it is a fact. It is a situation that exists.

Mr. McCORMACK. However, this is a very, very important bill and is very far reaching. I recall that when I appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary the distinguished chairman of that committee stated that there are many things which the States should do. It seems to me it is rather difficult for the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to report this bill when purely a State function is involved. I do not know whether or not I shall object to the bill, but I want to study it more. I am not prepared to state what my action would be after further study, but if I am pressed I shall have to object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a very brief explanation?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am always pleased to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman that this legislation deals with the transportation in interstate commerce of stolen animals. As has been stated by the gentleman who just preceded me, a situation has developed under which these interstate thieves with a high-powered truck may raid a herd of cattle or a flock of chickens belonging to some ranchman, and before daylight may be 400 or 500 miles away. It is really far more difficult to trace such stolen animals than it is to trace stolen commodities which are transported in railroad trains, and, as the gentleman knows, that is just what we tried to do. This situation involves cases where the thieves can load up a truck, travel on byroads, and before daylight may be 500 miles away.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. May I say, in corroboration of what has been stated here, that last fall in my own district a truck came to a farmhouse when the folks were in town shopping on a Saturday afternoon and stole 350 chickens. The chickens were found in Colorado, across the State line.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. I understand this particular bill is copied after the Dyer Act.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SHORT. This bill is very similar to that. The situation complained of prevails particularly in the Middle West and out in the West. I live just 18 miles north of the Arkansas line, and I know that this thievery has been going on.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, this is a far more important bill, because this involves private transportation, whereas the Dyer Act covered transportation by railroad.

Mr. SHORT. If the transportation of a stolen automobile is a crime, why should not the same principle apply in the case of livestock?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. NICHOLS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCORMACK, Mr. COSTELLO, and Mr. RAMSPECK objected.

DEVELOPMENT OF FACILITIES FOR WATER STORAGE AND UTILIZATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7697, to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, as I look at this bill it seems to be a bill to create a reclamation service in the Department of Agriculture. It is bad enough having one, let alone two.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, this does not have any reclamation or irrigation projects involved whatever. It refers only to small ponds and little bodies of water that can be created principally in the great plains area.

Mr. TABER. There is not any facility in the Department of Agriculture at the present time that has to do with this sort of work.

Mr. JONES. Yes; the regular soil conservation work.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I was just going to say that the regular Soil Conservation Service is doing this very work at this time. This is a matter of very great importance to the reclamation of such areas and I hope the gentleman will not press his objection.

Mr. JONES. There is no thought of engaging in reclamation projects or irrigation projects.

Mr. HOPE. This has no connection with reclamation whatever.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the Department of Agriculture not only has soil conservation, but the Bureau of Agricultural Engineering, and the purpose of this bill is to provide supplementary water supplies in the Great Plains area and it is not a reclamation project in any sense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 2863) was considered in lieu of the House bill and was read by the Clerk as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby recognized that the wastage and inadequate utilization of water resources on farm, grazing, and forest lands in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States resulting from inadequate facilities for water storage and utilization contribute to the destruction of natural resources, injuries to public health and public lands, droughts, periodic floods, crop failures, decline in standards of living, and excessive dependence upon public relief, and thereby menace the national welfare. It is therefore hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to assist in providing facilities for water storage and utilization in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States.

"SEC. 2. In order to effectuate this policy and promote proper land use in the said areas, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, from time to time—

(1) To formulate and keep current a program of projects for the construction and maintenance in the said areas of ponds, reservoirs, wells, check-dams, pumping installations, and other facilities for water storage or utilization, together with appurtenances to such facilities. The facilities to be included within such program shall be located where they will promote the proper utilization of lands and no such facilities shall be located where they will encourage the cultivation of lands which are submarginal and which should be devoted to other uses in the public interest;

(2) To construct and to sell or lease, with or without a money consideration, under such terms and conditions as will advance the purposes of this act, the facilities mentioned in section 2 (1) and included within the program there provided for, including the lands upon which such facilities are located if they have been acquired or reserved for the purposes of this act;

(3) To cooperate or enter into agreements with, or to furnish financial or other aid to, any agency, governmental or otherwise, or any person, subject to such conditions as he may deem necessary for the purposes of this act; and

(4) To obtain options upon and to acquire lands, or rights or interests therein, or rights to the use of water, by purchase, lease, gift, exchange, condemnation, or otherwise, only when necessary for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. The facilities included in the program provided for in section 2 (1) may be located—

(a) On lands owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, with the cooperation of the agency having jurisdiction thereof; and

(b) On any other lands upon obtaining proper consent or the necessary rights or interests in such lands.

SEC. 4. As a condition to extend benefits under this act to any lands not owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, the Secretary of Agriculture may, insofar as he may deem necessary for the purposes of this act, require—

(1) The enactment of State and local laws providing for soil conserving land uses and practices, and the storage, conservation and equitable utilization of waters;

(2) Agreements or covenants in regard to the maintenance and permanent use of such water, facilities, or lands benefited by such facilities;

(3) Contributions in money, services, materials, or otherwise to any operations conferring such benefits.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture, in administering the provisions of this act, shall utilize the officers, employees, and facilities of agencies within the Department of Agriculture whose functions are related to the program provided for in this act, and may allot to such agencies or transfer to such other agencies of the Federal Government as he may request to assist in carrying out any of the provisions of this act, any funds available for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 6. For the purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture may—

(1) Secure the cooperation of any governmental agency;

(2) Make expenditures for personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the purchase of law books and books of reference, for printing and binding, for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, for supplies and equipment, for traveling expenses, and for other administrative expenses; and

(3) Perform such acts, and prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem proper to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this act such sums as Congress may from time to time determine to be necessary.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7697) was laid on the table.

THE COAST GUARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7486, to increase the efficiency of the Coast Guard.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

As I understand it, the effect of this bill is to create a selection board amongst the officers of the Coast Guard.

Mr. BLAND. It is not strictly a selection board, it is rather an elimination board. It is entirely different from the Navy selection board. It does determine those who should be taken out of the line of promotion, but the maximum would be five officers a year.

Mr. TABER. That would be 25 percent of those who are taken into the officer personnel, or something like that.

Mr. BLAND. May I say to the gentleman that selection is in every service, including the enlisted men? The commissioned officers of the Coast Guard are the only men who are not subjected to these tests. They are given every right and they may appear by counsel before this board before they are permanently retired.

Mr. TABER. The operation of this system in the Navy and the Army has cost us a lot of money.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BLAND. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TABER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2761) authorizing the State of Maryland, by and through its State Roads Commission or the successors of said commission, to construct, maintain, and operate certain bridges across streams, rivers, and navigable waters which are wholly or partly within the State.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Maryland by and through its State roads commission or the successors of said commission be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate any or all of the following bridges and approaches thereto, at points suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, to wit:

A bridge across the Potomac River from a point in Charles County at or near Ludlows Ferry to a point approximately opposite in the State of Virginia near Dahlgren and Colonial Beach.

A bridge across the Chesapeake Bay from a point in Baltimore County at or near Millers Island to a point approximately opposite in Kent County at or near Tolchester; or, as an alternate thereto, a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay from a point in Anne Arundel County at or near Annapolis to a point approximately opposite on Kent Island: Provided, That the latter bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such bridge and approaches thereto.

A bridge across the Susquehanna River from a point in Cecil County at or near Perryville to a point approximately opposite in Harford County at or near Havre de Grace.

A bridge across the Patapsco River south of the city of Baltimore from a point at or near the mouth of North West Branch to a point approximately opposite at or near Fairfield: Provided, That the said bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such bridge and approaches thereto.

The times for commencing and completing the construction of any of the bridges authorized by this section shall expire 3 and 5 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

In lieu of any bridge hereinabove mentioned in this section, the State of Maryland by, and through its State Roads Commission or the successors of said commission be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a tunnel and approaches thereto at the same location; but no such tunnel shall be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such tunnel and accessory works. The word "bridge" or "bridges" as hereinafter used in this act shall be deemed to include and to apply to any such tunnel or tunnels, and the powers granted by and the conditions and limitations contained in this act shall be applicable in all respects to any such tunnel or tunnels.

The authority herein granted to construct, maintain, and operate any of the foregoing bridges shall not be deemed to be exclusive or to repeal the authority heretofore granted to any other corporation, public board, or agency to construct a bridge at the same location.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Maryland and its State Roads Commission or the successors of said commission all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of any or all such bridges and their approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The State of Maryland, by and through its State roads commission or the successors of said commission is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over any or all such bridges and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. The State of Maryland, by and through its State Roads Commission or the successors of said commission, may unite or group all or such of said bridges into one or more separate projects for financing purposes as in its judgment shall be deemed practicable. If tolls are charged for the use of a bridge or bridges in a project, the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge or bridges embraced in the particular project shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed an amount sufficient to pay the reasonable costs of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge or all of the bridges included in the particular project and their approaches under economical management, and not to exceed an amount sufficient in addition to the foregoing, to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the aggregate cost of the bridge or all of the bridges embraced in the particular project, and their approaches, including reasonable interest and financing costs, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period not exceeding 40 years from the completion of such bridge or from the date of completion of the last completed bridge in the particular project. The tolls derived from the bridge or bridges embraced in any particular project may be continued and paid into the appropriate sinking fund until all such costs of the bridge or bridges embraced in the particular project shall have been amortized. In any event, tolls may be charged on the basis aforesaid for transit over the bridge or bridges in each project for which revenue bonds of said State are issued, and such tolls may be continued and adjusted at such rates as may be necessary to pay such bonds with interest thereon and any lawful premium for the retirement thereof before maturity, subject only to the power of the Secretary of War or other authorized Federal authority to regulate such rates.

SEC. 5. The failure of the State of Maryland, by and through its State Roads Commission, to construct, maintain, and operate any one or more of the foregoing bridges, or to unite or group any two or more for financing purposes, shall in no wise affect its authority or powers hereby granted to construct, maintain, and operate such bridge or bridges as it may deem expedient, and any one of the bridges herein authorized may be constructed, maintained, and operated as a single project without uniting such bridge in a joint project with other bridges authorized herein.

SEC. 6. After a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of any bridge or bridges in any particular project or group or sufficient to pay the principal and interest on bonds issued for the purpose of financing such particular bridge or bridges or project or group shall have been provided to the extent hereinbefore required, the bridge or bridges included in any such project or group shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls: Provided, however, That tolls for the use of any such bridge or bridges may be continued thereafter in the event that such tolls shall have been pledged by the State Roads Commission to the payment of revenue bonds issued for any other bridge or bridges the construction of which shall have been authorized by Congress. An accurate record of the cost of each bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 7. The powers conferred by this act are supplementary and additional to all other authority and powers heretofore granted by law for the construction of the hereinbefore-named bridges, but all acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted, authorizing the construction of the hereinbefore-named bridges (except as applied to any bridge over the Potomac River) which are in conflict with the terms of this act be, and the same are, hereby repealed insofar as such conflict exists. Nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing tolls to be charged for the use of any one or more of the hereinbefore-named bridges except as hereinabove provided, and nothing herein shall be construed so as to prohibit the State of Maryland from paying all or any part of the costs of the construction of any one or more of such bridges or their approaches, and any and all bonds issued for such purposes, from any funds of the State which may now or hereafter be made available for that purpose.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LANDS OF BLACKFEET INDIAN TRIBE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2774) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to relinquish in favor of the Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., the interest in certain land acquired by the United States under the Federal reclamation laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] please explain this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a bill introduced at the request of the Secretary of the Interior. This land was taken away from the Indians by the United States Government for the purpose of establishing a reclamation reservoir. Then, later on, it was found to be impractical and now the Federal Government wants to give the land back to the Indians. This bill was prepared at the request of the Secretary of the Interior and given to Senator WHEELER, who secured its passage in the Senate. It has the approval of the Interior Department. I quote from the Acting Secretary of the Interior:

I recommend that the proposed legislation receive early and favorable consideration.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes.

Mr. RICH. He also says:

The Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget has advised that there is no objection to the presentation of this proposed legislation to the Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes. In other words, it has the approval of the Budget Bureau and of the Secretary of the Interior. The Government wants to give this land back to the Indians, and let the Government do it.

Mr. TABER. Did the Government pay the Indians for the land when they took it?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes; and the bill provides now that the Government is to be reimbursed out of the tribal funds and the money is there to do it.

Mr. TABER. All right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to relinquish in favor of the Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., the interest acquired by the United States for Federal reclamation purposes in the lands within the exterior boundaries of the present Blackfeet Indian Reservation that were acquired for Federal reclamation purposes and are determined in the opinion of said Secretary not to be needed for such purposes. Such relinquishment shall be conditioned upon the repayment into the reclamation fund of a sum equal to the amount taken therefrom for the purchase of the lands so relinquished, including the amounts paid for the benefit of allottees where the land acquired for Federal reclamation purposes was allotted land. Upon such relinquishment and payment being made, the title to said lands shall be and remain in the United States in trust for the Indians of the Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation of Montana: Provided, That in making such relinquishments the Secretary may reserve for Federal reclamation purposes such easements and rights as in his opinion may be required for present or future developments under the Federal reclamation laws, and the amount payable into the reclamation fund on account of such relinquishment shall be reduced by the value of the easements and rights so retained for Federal reclamation purposes, such value to be conclusively ascertained by said Secretary: Provided further, That no relinquishments herein authorized shall be effective unless approved in writing by the Blackfeet tribal council.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend from any moneys on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Blackfeet Indians not to exceed $30,000 for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS TO ENTER INTO AGREEMENTS UNDER AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7330, to permit Members of Congress to enter into agreements under agricultural programs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill, S. 2229, will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to contracts and agreements under the Agricultural Adjustment Act", approved January 25, 1934, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "and shall not apply to contracts or agreements of a kind which the Secretary of Agriculture may enter into with farmers: Provided, That such exemption shall be made a matter of public record".

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7830) was laid on the table.

REGIONAL RESEARCH LABORATORY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2789, to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of industrial uses for agricultural products; the first unit to be devoted to the development of industrial uses for cotton and cotton products; additional units to be provided for the study of other crops as additional funds are provided.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to state at this time that if unanimous consent is granted for the consideration of this bill, I would offer an amendment and would use 5 minutes for the purpose of explaining the amendment. It may cause some delay and I do not know whether it is the disposition of the House to consider the bill tonight or to consider it tomorrow under suspension of the rules, as I understand the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY] will be recognized for that purpose. I would object unless it is understood I have an opportunity to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY] desire to reply to the inquiry?

Mr. DOXEY. I desire to say as to the inquiry, my understanding of the procedure under the gentleman's reservation of objection—I do not know what his ground for objection may be.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not objecting, as the Chair understands. The gentleman from Wisconsin would have the right to offer any germane amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOXEY. If the bill is passed over without prejudice and an opportunity is afforded to bring this bill up under suspension of the rules, we would not be in any wise barred by the action here tonight, would we?

The SPEAKER. Absolutely not.

Mr. DOXEY. Does the gentleman intend to press his objection to the bill? Of course, I would rather get it passed by unanimous consent if possible. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, knowing the merits of this bill and also how the gentleman feels about it, I hope we can pass it tonight by unanimous consent.

Does the gentleman object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. I asked unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOXEY. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, three objections are required.

The SPEAKER. No. Only one objection is required.

Mr. DOXEY. May I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, in connection with my remarks, to have printed at this point in the RECORD the report that we made on this bill, in order that the gentlemen who are not acquainted with it will know just what the bill is?

Mr. RICH. He does not need to print that in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, so that the gentlemen will know. I know already.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how long is the report?

Mr. DOXEY. It is only a page and a half, but it explains the bill and the purpose of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2010, to authorize the appointment of an additional judge for the southern district of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1052, to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to further develop the cooperative extension system as inaugurated under the act entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture", approved May 8, 1914 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 7, secs. 341–348), there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the expenses of cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics and the necessary printing and distribution of information in connection with the same, the sum of $2,580,000 annually. The sums appropriated in pursuance of this section shall be paid to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii in the same manner and subject to the same conditions and limitations as the additional sums appropriated under the act of May 8, 1914, except that (1) $490,000 shall be paid to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii in equal shares; (2) $2,000,000 shall be paid to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii in the proportion that the farm population of each bears to the total farm population of the several States and the Territory of Hawaii, as determined by the last preceding decennial census; (3) $90,000 shall be allotted and paid to the several States and the Territory of Hawaii by the Secretary of Agriculture according to his judgment of their respective needs; and (4) the several States and the Territory of Hawaii shall not be required to offset the allotments authorized in this section (and their legislatures shall not be required to assent to the provisions of this section). The sums appropriated pursuant to this section shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, sums appropriated under such act of May 8, 1914, as amended and supplemented under authorizations contained in the acts of May 22, 1928, and June 29, 1935. Allotments to any State or the Territory of Hawaii for any fiscal year from the appropriations herein authorized shall be available for payment to such State or the Territory of Hawaii only if such State or the Territory of Hawaii complies, for such fiscal year, with the provisions with reference to offset of appropriations (other than appropriations under this section) for agricultural extension work.

AMENDMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2455, to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (act of June 29, 1936, ch. 858; 49 Stat. 1985).

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Has not the Clerk overlooked Calendar No. 526?

The SPEAKER. The bill referred to by the gentleman from Idaho passed the House today.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill S. 2455?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries give us a brief idea of what this amendment is?

Mr. BLAND. When the Merchant Marine Act was passed there were certain funds, as rents for terminals and things of that kind, which it was intended should be taken as assets by the Merchant Marine Commission. Under the ruling of the Comptroller, however, it was decided that they would have to be turned into the general funds of the Treasury. This bill simply carries out the original intention. I think it involves about $2,000,000.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Funds of the old Shipping Board?

Mr. BLAND. Rents that are coming in from leased terminals and things of that character.

Mr. O'MALLEY. And this validates the turning of those receipts into the Treasury?

Mr. BLAND. No; it validates keeping them with the Maritime Commission.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 202 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (act of June 29, 1936, ch. 858, 49 Stat. 1985, 1986), is hereby amended by adding a sentence at the end thereof to read as follows: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commission may, in accordance with good business methods and on such terms and conditions as it determines to effectuate the policy of this act, operate or lease any lands, docks, wharves, piers, or real property under its control, and all money heretofore or hereafter received from such operation or lease shall be available for expenditure by the Commission as provided in this act."

SEC. 2. That section 206 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (act of June 29, 1936, ch. 858, 49 Stat. 1985, 1987), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 206. All sums of money now in the construction loan fund created by section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, together with the proceeds of all debts, accounts, choses in action, and the proceeds of all notes, mortgages, and other evidences of indebtedness, hereby transferred to the Commission, and all of the proceeds of sales of ships and surplus property heretofore or hereafter made, including proceeds of notes or other evidences of debt taken therefor and the interest thereon, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, all money representing amounts of unclaimed wages, salvage awards, and miscellaneous unclaimed items carried as liabilities on the books of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation and all money heretofore or hereafter received from the operation or leasing of lands, docks, wharves, piers, or real property shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and there maintained as a revolving fund, herein designated as the construction fund, and shall be available for expenditure by the Commission in carrying out the provisions of this act. All moneys received by the Commission under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in its construction fund, and all disbursements made by the Commission under authority of this act shall be paid out of said fund, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, all disbursements applicable to the money referred to in this section may be made by the Commission out of said fund. Further appropriations by Congress to replenish said fund are hereby authorized."

SEC. 3. That section 209 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (act of June 29, 1936, ch. 858, 49 Stat. 1985, 1988), is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, without deduction, allocation, or segregation in any manner for amounts of unclaimed wages, salvage awards, and miscellaneous unclaimed items carried as liabilities on the books of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation."

SEC. 4. The sections of this act shall be deemed operative as of the effective date of the sections of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, amended thereby.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider and a similar House bill were laid on the table.

LOWELL CREEK, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6560, to authorize a modification of the project for the control of floods in Lowell Creek, Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, a similar Senate bill, S. 2258, was substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the project for the control of floods in Lowell Creek, Alaska, is hereby modified in accordance with the recommendation in House Document No. 154, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth therein, the work to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

Such lease shall contain express conditions that the corporation, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of War, will widen and deepen the Boundary Channel and will construct a retaining wall along the above-described arc, or cause such work to be done, under the supervision of the Secretary of War and in accordance with such terms and conditions as he may prescribe: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the expenditures, upon lands belonging to the United States, of funds heretofore appropriated by Congress."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPEAL OF TAX ON STEAMSHIP TICKETS BETWEEN PUERTO RICO AND UNITED STATES

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of H. R. 1481, to amend the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, to exempt persons traveling between Puerto Rico and the continental United States from payment of a stamp tax on steamship tickets.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do so only for the purpose of asking a question, will not the distinguished gentleman from Illinois take a few minutes to explain the effect of the bill?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to amend the Revenue Act of 1926 in which there was imposed a stamp tax on steamship tickets purchased in the United States to all countries except Canada, Mexico, Cuba, and coastwise points in the United States.

Our committee felt that Puerto Rico should be placed in the same category with Canada, Mexico, and Cuba; and, therefore, reported the bill unanimously.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. At the present time, as I understand it, passengers between Puerto Rico and the United States must pay a head tax of $5; whereas, if they traveled into Canada, Cuba, Mexico, or to any of the coastal points of continental United States they would pay no tax.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. That is true.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. This affects the revenues very slightly.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. It has a very slight effect upon the revenues and neither the Treasury Department nor the State Department interpose any objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. As a matter of fact, this has nothing to do with a head tax; it is merely a tax on passage tickets, is it not?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. It is a tax imposed upon tickets costing above $10.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What is the situation with reference to Hawaii?

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. There is no tax on tickets to Hawaii because that is a part of the United States; it is a Territorial possession.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision 5 of schedule A of title VIII of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended by section 442 (a) of the Revenue Act of May 29, 1928, be, and hereby is, amended by striking out the word "or" before the word "Cuba" and by adding the words "or Puerto Rico" after the word "Cuba."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNUITIES FOR CERTAIN LIBRARIANS OF CONGRESS

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 8136) authorizing retirement annuities for certain Librarians of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who serves or has served 36 years or more as Librarian of Congress shall be paid a retirement annuity in equal monthly installments at the rate per annum of two-thirds of his annual pay at the time of his separation from the service either by reason of resignation, retirement, or appointment of his successor by the President of the United States, which annuity shall begin to accrue on date of separation and continue for the life of annuitant. The eligibility in respect to length of service of applicants for such annuity shall be determined by the Comptroller General or the successor to his present duties. Such annuity shall be paid by the disbursing officer of the Library of Congress, and such sums as may be necessary to make such payments are hereby authorized to be appropriated.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred thirty-three Members are present, a quorum.

Is a second demanded?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised to find this bill called up under suspension of the rules. Last year there was a consultation, as I recall it, between the chairman of the Library Committee, Dr. Putnam, and myself. At first Dr. Putnam seriously demurred at any effort to retire him. After consultation with the Library Committee he acquiesced. I have not the slightest idea that he is anxious to be retired, although as the chairman has said, he has served faithfully and well for 36 years.

Anyone who has had any dealings with the gentleman knows of his ability, capacity, and mentality, and I for one fail to see where even at 75 he is showing any appearance of lack of mentality to continue actively in the wonderful work he has performed in the past. Dr. Putnam is away on his vacation at the present time. I personally would be very sorry to see this bill passed tonight under suspension of the rules without a word from him that it not only meets with his acquiescence but with his approval.

The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on the Library, has indicated what a valuable service Dr. Putnam has performed, and, as he is capable of continuing that work, I think he ought to be left in the position. I understand from the gentleman that this bill was on the Consent Calendar but was objected to because it called for three-quarters retirement pay. A bill was introduced here on the 3d of August and reported out on the 5th of August, making the amount of retirement two-thirds. If his services have been so valuable, why reduce it?

Mr. KELLER. May I answer the question?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. KELLER. The bill was not objected to. A gentleman over on that side, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], proposed an amendment and it was carried without thorough understanding of the situation. The amendment so ruined the bill I asked that it be recommitted to the Committee on the Library. It was recommitted and a new bill was drafted. It had to be changed in some respects.

Mr. TREADWAY. I doubt if any movement on the part of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] would ruin a bill. He is a man of too much ability, as the gentleman states, to ruin a bill.

May I call attention to the fact that, irrespective of the merit of the services of Dr. Putnam, by the passage of this bill you are setting up an entirely new precedent in the way of retirement of officials of the Government. Several times movements of this kind to retire men have failed, and this one ought to fail, because I am as confident as I stand here that it does not meet the request, at least, or the desire of Dr. Putnam to be retired. He may be forced out by a movement of this kind, but it is not out of compliment to Dr. Putnam that this measure is before us tonight.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. What in the world would a man 75 years of age do with $7,500 a year?

Mr. TREADWAY. If he were retired, that would be his business.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand, Dr. Putnam has no rights or privileges by reason of which he can retire now.

Mr. TREADWAY. None whatever.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The reason for this is that none of the employees of the Library is under civil service.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Dr. Putnam all these years has himself been in great measure the reason why these people have not been under the civil service. If Dr. Putnam would bend a little and yield a little and give these employees the protection of the civil service, then he might with good grace ask us to give him the protection of retirement. As long as he opposes giving the employees of the Library the protection of retirement under the civil service, he ought not to ask the protection of retirement for himself.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. It is a fact that Dr. Putnam has served for 36 years plus?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SHORT. At the present time Dr. Putnam is drawing a salary of $10,000 a year. He has had his nose in the feed bag and has fattened to the extent of some $300,000 from the taxpayers of this Nation. Now we are asked to vote a pension to Dr. Putnam, although he has never paid 1 dime into a pension fund. If we pass this bill, we will establish a dangerous precedent whereby any employee of a Government agency may reap benefits without contributing to the pension fund.

Mr. TREADWAY. The services of Dr. Putnam have been well worth the salary paid him. He is recognized as one of the outstanding librarians in the world.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the Democratic Members of the House to a statement in this report which is in error. The report states this is a plan similar to that provided in the Civil Service Retirement Act. It is not. The 450,000 employees of this Government who are under the Civil Service Retirement Act pay 3½ percent of their salaries each month into this fund.

Mr. SHORT. Of course.

Mr. RAMSPECK. This gentleman has not paid anything into any fund. There are approximately 400,000 employees of the Government who are in the same position as Dr. Putnam—not covered by that act. Therefore, if you pass this bill, you are setting a precedent which will plague you in the future with reference to the other 400,000 who do not have any retirement privileges. I believe this is bad policy and that we ought not to set this precedent. If we want to give a retirement privilege, let us put it under the Retirement Act, just as we have done with our own employees in the House at this session of Congress. We have men here like Marcellus Sheild, who has been here for years, rendered great service, but must pay at least $4,000 into the retirement fund in order to participate; yet the Committee on the Library is proposing to give Dr. Putnam three-fourths of his annual salary without any contribution from him at all. I say it is unfair to the other employees of the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DUNN.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia has stated it is unfair for the gentleman from Illinois to bring this bill up for consideration at this time. May I say it is not unfair for Dr. Putnam to be placed in this category, because we Members of Congress are the ones who are responsible. If we had passed a proper retirement law and put him under that law, it would not now be necessary for the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KELLER) to bring up a bill for the benefit of Dr. Putnam. Do not blame Dr. Putnam. The Members of Congress are responsible for all of this legislation which should have been enacted into law.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman I did not state it was unfair to Dr. Putnam, I stated it was unfair to the other employees of the Government.

Mr. DUNN. I believe we Members of Congress in many respects fail to do our duty toward people who have rendered valuable service to the Government. Do not blame it on the employees, blame it on the members of Congress, and quit blaming it on the poor people who work for the Government.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, through many years as a member of the Committee on the Library, and part of the time as its chairman, I was in close association with Dr. Putnam, renewing associations of youth. Naturally, I came to understand the value of his work, a work that has made him the leader of all the librarians of the world. He is the undisputed leader of the profession of librarian. Naturally, I took much interest in this proposal when I heard of it a year ago, and I talked the matter over with Dr. Putnam. I found that he was not desirous of leaving his work, but that there were certain advantages about it that might make the proposal acceptable. Nevertheless, as far as I know, and I have been in frequent contact with him since then, he is still wavering between what would be his own desire and what would be the best for the Library.

While he is in this position, while it is impossible at this juncture to confer with him, it seems to me the wise, right, and fair thing to do to let this matter go over until the next session, when his pleasure may be learned. He is in excellent health, his faculties are unimpaired, he still takes the keenest interest in his work, continues to demonstrate that remarkable tact, as an administrator, which has brought him into such favor with nearly every Member of the Congress.

It has been said that nation is happiest that has no history, and it may be said of his administration in all these years that it has proved its merit by its freedom from controversy, by the satisfaction it has given to Congress after Congress. The smoothness with which that institution has been run is itself proof of his remarkable capacity as an administrator.

I hope, therefore, there will be no action taken tonight. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, William H. Moran served this Government as a member of the Secret Service for 53 years. For 18 years he was Chief of the Secret Service. He was receiving a salary of $9,000 at the end of his service. A bill was brought into this House to give him an annuity of $4,000 a year. When retired he was entitled to, and is receiving today, $1,500 a year from the Government. This means that the bill would have cost the Government $2,500 a year additional. This House refused to pass the bill. It was stated that we would be setting a precedent which would be a bad one, and now you ask us to vote for a bill that will give the Librarian of Congress, who has served thirty-odd years, $7,500 a year for the rest of his life. Mr. Moran contributed to the retirement fund; Dr. Putnam does not.

In his report, the gentleman from Illinois speaks of the Army and the Navy officers. I do not know whether it has been brought to his attention, but it has been brought to my attention time and again, by letters and petitions, urging that Congress provide that the Army and the Navy officers of this country contribute something toward a retirement fund, exactly as the civilian employee does. We take a man and put him at Annapolis or West Point, give him an education that millions of our boys would like to have, and the moment he steps out of the academy he goes to work, is put on the pay roll. He is not like the boy who comes out of a private institution and has to go out into the world and look for a job. The Army or the Navy officer is promoted and promoted and, finally, is retired at three-fourths of his pay. The Congress of the United States some day is going to consider the question of requiring Army and Navy officers to contribute toward a retirement fund that will help pay the bill when they are retired, just exactly as the civil employees of the Government are required to do.

Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers who would be required to pay Dr. Putnam this $7,500 a year will very properly protest if this bill is passed. The employees of the Library should have been eligible to retirement when the law was passed. No one, Dr. Putnam or any other official or employee ever requested, so far as I know, to be made subject to that act. I know they did not ask me to help to have them included by an amendment to the law. I would have been willing to help.

Mr. Speaker, this House said "no" to Chief Moran, and it should now refuse to set a precedent that will surely return to plague us. The bill should be defeated. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHORT) there were—ayes 116, noes 115.

So two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was rejected.

TRANSPORTATION OF STOLEN ANIMALS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 1375, as amended, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, buy, sell, or dispose of any such animal, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide thereof, moving in or constituting a part of interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment of not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 5. Any person violating section 3 of this act may be prosecuted in any district from, into, or through which such animal, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide thereof, has been transported or removed.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal, modify, or amend any part of the National Stolen Property Act.

The SPEAKER. Without objection a second will be considered as ordered, and without objection the rules will be suspended and the bill passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

There was no objection.

So the bill was passed.

BANKHEAD-JONES ACT APPLICABLE TO PUERTO RICO

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7908) to extend the benefits of section 21 of the Bankhead-Jones Act to Puerto Rico.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 21 of the act entitled "An act to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges", approved June 29, 1935, and known as the Bankhead-Jones Act, be, and the same are hereby, extended to Puerto Rico in such amounts as are hereinafter authorized without diminution of the amounts authorized for payment to the States and the Territory of Hawaii, as provided in section 21 of that act.

SEC. 2. To carry into effect the above provisions for extending to Puerto Rico, to the extent herein provided, the benefits of the said Bankhead-Jones Act, the following sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated: For the fiscal year beginning after the date of the enactment of this act, $88,000; for the fiscal year following the first fiscal year for which an appropriation is made in pursuance of the foregoing authorization, the additional sum of $40,000; and for each succeeding fiscal year thereafter an additional sum of $40,000 until the total appropriations authorized by this section shall amount to $408,000 annually, the authorization to continue in that amount for each succeeding fiscal year.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR NORBECK, OF SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. BULOW. Mr. President, I desire to divert the attention of the Senate from their pending business for a moment in order to pay a brief tribute to memory of a former Member of this body.

The late PETER NORBECK served in this body with distinction for a period of more than 15 years, he having the honor of being the first native-born son to represent South Dakota here. He was born in the Territory of the Dakotas before South Dakota was admitted into the Union. He played a prominent and important part in the development of that great State. During his lifetime he devoted his energies to the development of a great prairie section of our country and made it a fitting place for human habitation. His father and mother were pioneers and were numbered among the first permanent homesteaders that settled in the Territory of Dakota. He suffered all of the privations and hardships of pioneer life incident to the building of a new country. He was blessed with an abundance of physical strength and energy inherited from generations of Viking ancestry. In his veins flowed the blood of Scandinavian people who did so much in the development of that northwest territory.

Mr. President, I might go on and enumerate many of his achievements and the services he rendered, but the occasion and time forbid reflections in detail. There, however, is one outstanding thing that I want to stress and that is his philosophy of life as I gathered it from him during an acquaintanceship and a close personal friendship of almost a half century. During this period of our intimate companionship, at many times and upon many occasions I wondered and marveled at the vision that this man had. PETER NORBECK had an abiding faith in the future.

He looked ever to the rising rather than to the setting sun. The only time that he spent in viewing the past was to learn lessons that might aid the future. He often expressed the sentiment that today was a better day than yesterday and that tomorrow would be better than today. He enjoyed rendering services to his fellows. The accumulation of money meant nothing to him except its use to aid a human cause. No one ever went to Senator Norbeck in a worthy cause in vain. He was generous to a fault. He underwrote financial obligations for many of his friends whom he sought to help and by doing so perhaps reposed too much confidence in his fellow men and suffered large financial losses through the confidence thus reposed. He died a poor man so far as the accumulation of money and worldly goods is concerned but he died rich beyond measure in the heritage of friends.

For many years Mr. NORBECK was engaged in well-drilling enterprises, drilling thousands of wells, bringing water from the artesian basin to the surface without which that vast section of prairie country could not have been developed. Without the service he thus rendered, a large section of my State would be uninhabitable. One of his outstanding services to the people of my State while he was Governor and after he became Senator was rendered in establishing parks. Senator NORBECK was a great student of nature. He loved the great outdoors, its fields and woods, its hills and valleys, lakes and streams. He did more than any other man in South Dakota to preserve for future generations some of the wildlife and the natural beauty spots of that great State. He had no sympathy with anyone who wantonly or recklessly destroyed any of nature's beauties. I shall always remember one remark he made to me. He and I were traveling in the Black Hills, which is one of the beauty spots of the Nation, and observed that someone had barked and partially cut down a magnificent pine tree, and he said, "BULOW, it is unfortunate that a fool in 30 minutes can destroy a tree that it took God a hundred years to build."

Senator NORBECK lived a useful life. That life was useful because of the services that he rendered while living it. No eulogy I could pronounce, no encomium that could fall from my lips, would add to or detract from the splendid service that he rendered. The life that he lived and the example he set in the living of that life by rendering services to his fellows are worthy of emulation. By reason of the services thus rendered the people of South Dakota honor his memory and mourn his passing.

TRIBUTE TO LATE SENATOR FLETCHER BY HON. WILLIAM L. HILL

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, during the evening of May 18 last, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Florida assembled in joint session at Tallahassee, when services were held honoring the memories of Hon. Duncan U. Fletcher and Hon. Park Trammell, who were for a number of years and at time of death Members of this body—the former since March 1909, and the latter since March 1917.

Among those to address the assemblage on that occasion was Hon. William L. Hill, who, as many of us know, served continuously and faithfully for more than 19 years as secretary to Senator Fletcher, and was appointed by Gov. Dave Sholtz a Senator to serve until a successor had been elected to fill the unexpired term of the Senator.

I dare say that no person is more intimately acquainted with the public life of Senator Fletcher than is Mr. Hill. In view of their close association for so long a time and the fact that Mr. Hill is a former Member of the Senate, I request that the introduction of Mr. Hill by State Senator Spessard L. Holland and Mr. Hill's address honoring the memories of our late colleagues be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the introduction and address were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN (Senator Adams). Next on the program will be the introduction of former Senator William L. Hill, of Florida, by Senator Spessard L. Holland, of Polk County.

Senator HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Senate and the House, and distinguished guests and friends: This is an unexpected privilege and pleasure which comes to me this evening. The program committee did not know that we were to be honored by the presence of this distinguished Floridian, former United States Senator from Florida, the Honorable William L. Hill, of Gainesville. I cannot conceive of any greater pleasure that could come to me than the presentation of this distinguished gentleman to this gathering. I am sure that he will pardon me, and I am sure that you will understand that I mean what I say, in saying that my pleasure comes not so much from the fact that he served us as United States Senator from this State, directly succeeding Senator Duncan U. Fletcher for a period of some 6 months after his death, but particularly because of the fact that for 19 years he served in the relationship of confidential secretary to that great Floridian, Senator Duncan U. Fletcher. His close personal friend and devoted partner, who served the interests of this State and of the people of this State, Senator Hill is due the greatest of credit for the rendition of service and for his help, always to be remembered by the thousands of Floridians who found in him such a ready and willing helper in getting done at Washington those things which were of such vital importance to the people of this State.

I deem it an honor and a pleasure to present to you that great partner, for 19 years, of Senator Fletcher, the Honorable William L. Hill.

ADDRESS OF HON. WILLIAM L. HILL

Mr. Chairman, I deeply appreciate your invitation to be present on this occasion and to speak principally concerning one whom I honored greatly, whose memory I shall ever revere. My acquaintance with Senator Duncan U. Fletcher began prior to 1908. From the spring of 1917 until his death, last June, I served as his confidential secretary. My close association with him for 19 years ripened into more than friendship. I learned to love him.

It was generous of Members of the Legislature to set aside this evening when friends may pay tribute to the late Senators Duncan U. Fletcher and Park Trammell—colleagues and friends in life and, in the beyond. The occasion for such a service as this never before occurred in the history of our State, so far as I recall.

Four Senators from Florida have died in the service: Senator Stephen R. Mallory died December 23, 1907; Senator William J.

Bryan died March 22, 1908; Senator Park Trammell died May 8, 1936; and Senator Duncan U. Fletcher died June 17, 1936.

I was privileged for a number of years to know Senator Trammell. He was kind, gentle, and sympathetic, and rendered a great service to the State and the Nation; he was a friend to many and a friend of many. He was also "the big brother" of a large family. His responsibilities were many, and his going was also a great loss to friends, the State, and Nation.

Senator Fletcher's life of almost fourscore years covered momentous times in the history of this Nation. Born in Georgia shortly before the Civil War, the son of one who served in the Confederate Army, he recalled vividly trying experiences of the family during the absence of its head. His mother passed away a few days before Captain Fletcher returned to the home, from which he had been away for some time, unaware of her illness or death. It is not then strange that Senator Fletcher was so devoted to the South, its traditions, and its people. Nor is it strange that so many people of the Southland, especially Georgians, were interested in the success of his career at Washington.

Shortly after completing his education at Vanderbilt University, Mr. Fletcher came to Jacksonville and, until his election to the Senate, was actively engaged in the practice of law. His professional career was distinguished by knowledge of law, aggressiveness, loyalty to clients and associates, and a consistent effort to have justice dealt without favor between man and man. This, in addition to rendering satisfactory service in several important positions during trying times, made for him a high place in the esteem of friends throughout the State.

At the end of a spirited campaign, Mr. Fletcher was nominated and elected United States Senator in 1908, and March following took the oath of office as junior Senator from Florida, at Washington. Senator James P. Taliaferro was then the senior Senator. Every 6 years thereafter Senator Fletcher was again so honored by a people who continued to recognize his honesty and ability. He served longer than has any other Member of the Congress from Florida, and was grateful to friends who made that possible.

The junior Senator from Florida quickly demonstrated that he was entitled to the respect and confidence of his associates—Democrats and Republicans alike. They were not long in realizing that he was exceptionally well informed, aggressive, and dependable. This deserved reputation he bore to the end. He stood always for the best traditions, highest ideals, and the recognized courtesies, proprieties, and dignity of the Senate. His naturally refined and affable nature appealed to all who came in contact with him. He did not possess the spirit of vanity, and never practiced the methods of a bully. He established and maintained a high place in the confidence and affections of those who knew him best, that was almost sublime.

At all times Senator Fletcher had at heart what he believed was for the best interest of all the people, and did his duty faithfully and fearlessly as he saw it. He understood and appreciated the responsibilities assumed by a legislator. Senator Fletcher had the proper conception of government. His thoughts were largely of the future—at least a generation ahead; and he labored conscientiously, day in and day out—at times far into the night, in order that he would be fully informed regarding the possible effect of pending legislation. The thoroughness with which he pursued a subject qualified him to debate most effectively.

Reared on a farm, it was his delight there to work at any task assigned. He took advantage then, as well as later in life, of every opportunity to improve his mind and surroundings. He looked forward then, the same as he did in later years. On several occasions in my presence, he spoke of how little work some people did, and remarked, "Work alone never killed anyone." He said everyone should work at something 6 days in the week, and rest on the Sabbath.

Senator Fletcher assumed every responsibility willingly. He never shirked a duty. His vigorous handling of many important matters will long be remembered by those affected. He loved justice. His desire was to be just and fair toward all men. The mistakes he made were of the mind and not of the heart. He realized that every man makes mistakes at times and that no one is perfect. No person dared question his honesty or his integrity.

The Senator was a Christian gentleman. His religious views were liberal; and among his friends were members of all churches and creeds—poor and rich, white and black. He had no enemies—of that I am certain, other than political; and only those because of misunderstandings. Several weeks prior to his death he said to me: "I do not harbor ill will against any man, and I hope no man harbors ill will against me."

I dare say that few men were, in proportion to income, more charitable than Senator Fletcher. His contributions to worthy causes amounted to at least 10 percent of his income. He was not parsimonious, as many within the sound of my voice well know. He sacrificed a financial earning capacity of large proportions in order to serve the people of Florida in the Senate. There awaited him in 1908 an attractive legal position, had he but said the word; but he preferred to forget self and dedicate his efforts whole-heartedly to the service of the State and Nation. At the time of going to Washington he was in moderate circumstances and continued in practically the same circumstances during the remainder of his life. He left no fortune. Never to my knowledge did he accept courtesies extended by persons interested in the outcome of pending legislation. When making trips to and from Washington and elsewhere he paid the full cash price covering all transportation charges for himself and family. No fee was accepted by him for services rendered after he took the oath of office as United States Senator. He was scrupulously honest. There were no skeletons in his closet or backyard to haunt him.

The only criticism of Senator Fletcher I recall having heard—this during his lifetime—was that his most conspicuous services were to the Nation rather than to the State. Be that as it may, he rendered great service to the State and to the Nation as a whole—greater than any theretofore rendered by a Member of Congress from Florida. While he did not attempt in any manner to dictate the policies or the politics of his State, yet he was deservingly recognized nationally as one of Florida's outstanding citizens.

Senator Fletcher was an uncompromising Democrat. His fidelity to fundamental principles of the party was never questioned. Only during the recent national emergency did he vote in favor of enacting legislation concerning the constitutionality of which there was doubt in his mind. Not to my knowledge did he ever criticize decisions of the Supreme Court. He respected the opinions of its Justices, even though he did not at times agree entirely with their conclusions.

The memory of Senator Fletcher's life and character will ever remain with those who were privileged to be associated with him. His character and unsullied reputation have left us the richer because of our acquaintance with and veneration for him. When he passed on, the President and Members of his Cabinet, Members of the Congress, public officials and friends everywhere felt his death as a personal bereavement. In his death the Nation lost a Statesman. We are further comforted in knowing that while life was in the body deserved tributes were paid to Senator Fletcher by his colleagues in the Senate and by other friends elsewhere. Those tributes touched him greatly and he appreciated them immensely.

While this occasion brings to us sorrow, yet, after listening to the tributes paid our departed friends, we should be refreshed by the brief reviews of their lives and expressions of the high esteem in which they were held.

As time marches on, no friend should neglect to cherish the memory of Senator Duncan U. Fletcher and the memory of Senator Park Trammell. The recollection of pleasant association with them will abide with me to the end. I shall ever honor and cherish their memories.

INVESTIGATION PERTAINING TO CONTRACTS BETWEEN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS AND THE PHILIPPINE RAILWAY CO.

Mr. WALSH (for himself and Mr. COPELAND), by request, submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 188), which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Whereas by an act of the Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905, the then existing Territorial government of the Philippine Islands, for the purpose of enabling it to induce the investment of private capital in the construction and operation of railroad facilities then deemed essential both for reasons of economic development and maintenance of civil authority and military defense, and which the Philippine government was then financially unable to undertake on its own account, was empowered to enter into a contract of guaranty with any railroad company organized under the laws of the United States or any State, or under the laws of the Philippine Islands, whereby the Philippine Islands government should guarantee interest at not exceeding 4 percent per annum upon first-lien-mortgage bonds to be issued by such company and according to various other terms and conditions as are more particularly set out in said act of Congress; and

Whereas, pursuant to the authority so conferred upon it, the then existing Territorial government of the Philippines invited bids for the construction of railroads in the islands, and accepted the bid of the Philippine Railway Co., a company organized under the laws of the State of Connecticut; and in 1906 entered into a contract with said company, undertaking to guarantee interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum upon bonds to be issued only against completed mileage, to the extent of 95 percent of the cost as determined and approved by the Philippine government; and

Whereas, pursuant to said contract, the company proceeded with the construction and operation of sundry railway lines on the islands of Panay and Gebu, said construction and operation being all under the supervision and in the virtual control of said Territorial government, which was officially represented on the board of directors of said railway company by two United States Army officers of the Bureau of Insular Affairs; and

Whereas there were issued in due course 30-year 4-percent gold mortgage bonds, dated July 1, 1907, in total principal amount of $8,549,000, all bearing imprinted thereon the unconditional guarantee of the government of the Philippine Islands for the payment of interest "until the date of maturity or redemption", and reciting that the guarantee was pursuant to an act of Congress of the United States; and

Whereas the bonds so issued were widely sold to private investors upon the faith and credit of the Territorial government of the Philippine Islands, and by implication upon the faith and credit of the Government of the United States, and under circumstances deliberately contrived to lead the purchasers of said bonds unsuspectingly to assume that these railway-company bonds were in the same category as government bonds of the Philippine Islands and of the United States. Lending color to this assumption was the fact that the Secretary of the United States Treasury by a special ruling prior to the public offering of said bonds certified them as acceptable security for United States Government deposits, thereby ranking them on a parity with United States Government bonds; the fact that the Secretary of War by special order referred without limitation to the guarantee of the interest on these bonds by the Philippine government and referred to the "paramount necessity of railroads for the welfare of the Philippine people", etc., and authorized the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department to accept subscriptions for said bonds; and these facts are prominently displayed in the prospectus offering said bonds for subscription, the prospectus saying, among other things, that "all details of the mortgage and issue (of bonds) have been approved by the Secretary of War of the United States"; and on the bonds themselves the words "guaranty" and "Philippine Islands" and "United States" were conspicuous; and

Whereas the holders of said bonds received their interest payments as the same fell due up to the 1st day of July of this year, said date being the maturity of said bonds; said interest having been advanced in large part by the government of the Philippine Islands pursuant to the guarantee; and

Whereas none of the bonds so issued and purchased in good faith by a great number of investors in this and other countries, have been redeemed; and

Whereas the bondholders have been notified that no interest payments will be forthcoming hereafter, and that no funds are available for the payment of the principal of said bonds, which become due on said July 1, 1937; and

Whereas the government of the Philippine Islands, being itself the principal creditor of said Philippine Railway Co., other than the bondholders, is reported to have instituted receivership proceedings in the Philippine courts and to all intents and purposes is now in full possession of all of the property and assets of said railway company and is operating the same for its own account, notwithstanding the fact that by the terms of the mortgage securing said bonds, the bondholders, in event of default, are entitled to possession of the property; and

Whereas the holders of said Philippine Railway Co. bonds now find themselves deprived of their principal, deprived of the property, and deprived of interest hereafter accruing, notwithstanding the guaranty which pledged payment of interest "until the date of maturity or redemption" and which has been construed by the bondholders as continuing to the date of redemption, even though, as has now transpired, the unspecified redemption date is subsequent rather than prior to the specified maturity date: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General is requested to institute an official inquiry into, and investigation of, all of the circumstances attending the making of the contract between the government of the Philippine Islands and the Philippine Railway Co. and the issuance of the bonds thereunder, and their public sale under the auspices of the War Department, and the terms and conditions expressed or implied of the guaranty attached to said bonds by the government of the Philippine Islands, and the present default and denial by the Philippine Government of further liability to the bondholders, and the present relation of the Philippine Governmei t to said railway company and the present legal status of the physical property; all with a view to reporting to the Senate as soon as is practicable, and if not incompatible with the public interest, all of the pertinent facts and the law applicable thereto bearing on:

(1) The question of whether the guaranty of interest on said bonds entered into in 1907 by the Territorial government of the Philippine Islands has been fully complied with, or still remains applicable to interest on said bonds hereafter accruing until the same shall have been redeemed;

(2) The question of whether the facts and circumstances create an implied obligation upon the Government of the Philippine Islands to save the holders of said bonds from loss of their principal, being money loaned upon the faith and credit of said government, and to redeem said bonds by the payment of the principal;

(3) The question of whether the facts and circumstances create an implied obligation upon the Government of the United States to save the holders of said bonds from loss on account of the present default;

To the end that Congress may be fully informed and may then be in a position to determine what action by Congress, if any, is required or warranted in the premises.

MERCHANTS NATIONAL BANK & TRUST CO., VICKSBURG, MISS.

Mr. LOGAN. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6682) for the relief of the Merchants National Bank & Trust Co., and I submit a report (No. 1293) thereon. I invite the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Kentucky. The bill has passed the House and is of local concern. It authorizes the payment of some money to a bank in Mississippi in full satisfaction of its claim. The amount involved is not great, being less, I think, than a thousand dollars. The bill has been recommended by the Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill the title of which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6682) for the relief of the Merchants National Bank & Trust Co.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

RADIO ADDRESS BY SENATOR GUFFEY—PERSONAL STATEMENTS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to say a word or two with reference to a matter which took place last evening.

I feel highly honored, Mr. President, that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] has singled me out as one of three Members of the Senate for the purpose of broadcasting a speech, which everyone knows that he did not write, and which everyone knows he would not have dared to deliver upon the floor of the Senate, because he would have been afraid that he would have had to yield to the Senators to whom he referred.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I call the Senator to order under rule XIX.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Go on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana will take his seat.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Montana be allowed to proceed by complying with the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana will proceed in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I assumed that I was in order, Mr. President. If I am not in order in what I am going to say, I want to call the attention of the Senate to what the Senator from Pennsylvania said with reference to me. He said:

> The Montana Senator [Mr. WHEELER], if and when he again seeks a high national office, will have to give to the people of the United States something more than academic argument in explanation of his broken promises.

Of course, that statement means that the Senator from Montana lied. I am amazed that any Senator upon the floor of the Senate should make a statement of that kind against a fellow Senator; but I happen to know that just before Mr. Farley went to Indianapolis to ask for party harmony and to state there would be no reprisals, the same Mr. Farley, or his office, arranged with a broadcasting company for the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] to deliver his speech over the radio.

In the first place, in order to keep the record straight, let me say that I have never at any time changed my views with reference to the platform on which I ran with the late Senator La Follette. If the Senator from Pennsylvania would read that platform he would find that the great Senator from Wisconsin never at any time advocated packing the Supreme Court as a remedy for the conditions which he had in mind. On the other hand, he advocated a constitutional amendment, in various speeches, particularly in one which I think was made at Madison Square Garden—at least, his son-in-law told me that in a speech he made there—when he was being attacked by reason of the provisions of the platform which he had drafted and on which he was standing. This great and honest liberal suggested a constitutional amendment so that Congress by a two-thirds vote, should have the power to override a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding an act of Congress invalid on constitutional grounds. The late Senator La Follette declared that what he wanted to do was to submit a constitutional amendment to the people of this country, and that they should vote upon its adoption. May I direct the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the fact that I have months ago introduced such amendment in the Senate and that it still pends before the Judiciary Committee. This is the very amendment which Senator La Follette and I advocated in 1924.

The position I have always taken is that we should have a constitutional amendment, and I thought that I had made this clear to everyone, including the Senator from Pennsylvania, but apparently he did not understand that such was my position.

I am glad that the Senator did not include me among those who he said were "ingrates" to the President of the United States, because I am sure that, no matter how much I may have disagreed with the President, he would never, for a moment, suggest that I had been ungrateful to him, or that he was responsible for my election, or that he ever contributed anything to my election, or that the Democratic National Committee ever contributed anything to my election, or that the Senator from Pennsylvania ever contributed anything to my election, either directly or indirectly. I think, likewise, everyone knows that I did not need any contribution from them, that I did not need any help, and that I did not ride into office on the coattails of the President of the United States.

I hope when I do become a candidate for the Senate, if I should become a candidate in 1940, that the Senator from Pennsylvania will come out to Montana with his contributions, and that he will take the other side and support my opponent, whoever he may be. When he runs for Governor of Pennsylvania I shall make it a point to visit the State of Pennsylvania. I shall not have any of Mr. Mellon's money and I shall not have anybody else's money. I shall go there at my own expense and with my own money, and I shall make some speeches in Pennsylvania.

It may be all right, Mr. President, for some people constantly to talk and harangue and accuse others because they disagree upon the floor of the Senate upon some fundamental measure, and immediately to say that that individual has "sold out." That is just cheap politics. That is demagoguery of the worst kind. So far as my liberal viewpoints are concerned, the people of my State know me and they know me much better than does the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I probably should not say anything with reference to this attack upon me, and I would not have said anything about it had it not been for the attack made upon the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. For 14 or 15 years I have served in the Senate of the United States. In all that time I have never heard a Member of the Senate, Republican or Democrat—neither Republican nor Democrat—say things about another Senator or cast reflections upon him such as were said about and cast upon the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. It is said that when the votes are cast next time he will have to "go back to his home on the range."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I say to my friend from Montana that I would vastly prefer that he did not continue upon this phase of the discussion? I know perfectly well that nothing said on the radio last night will in the slightest degree injure me or in the slightest degree hinder me from doing my duty as I see it. I know perfectly well that the Members of this body know exactly how to assess the value of the attack that was made last night. It may not be that the country understands, because the country may be under the impression that since the chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee was talking he was speaking with authority. Mr. President, I am confident that he had none.

I want to say that nothing the gentleman said last night pertaining to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] or the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] can injure either of those Senators, but what he said may injure the Democratic Party and every Democratic Senator on the floor. I say here in the presence of the gentleman who spoke on the radio last night, and in the presence of those Democrats who are likely to be candidates for office in 1938, the sooner we get that man out of the position he now occupies by virtue of the acquiescence of his fellows, the better it will be for the Democratic Party.

It makes no difference to me. My people of Wyoming know how to handle bossism wherever it appears. If anybody undertakes to "go out on the range" into my home State, no matter who it may be, I shall be willing to meet him there and discuss what I have done and what I intend to do.

Mr. President, let me say before I take my seat that if it were possible for any person under heaven to come to me now upon this floor and say to me, "You may withdraw everything that you have done, everything that you have said; you may change the record and rewrite it so that you will be counted upon the other side and be in a position to receive the favors of the chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee", I would not change a word or a line or a vote.

When the time comes that a Senator of the United States can be challenged by a colleague over the air, outside of this Chamber, in the manner we were challenged last night, for a vote cast in good faith, I say to you, Mr. President, the dignity of the Senate has been drawn in the mud.

Nothing that was done by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] or the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] and nothing that I have done in this Chamber has impaired the dignity of this body or its Members. That cannot be said of another gentleman in this body.

Mr. President, I would rather walk out of the door of this Chamber and never return than to surrender any honest conviction I have. I say to you, Mr. President, and I say to you Senators of the United States, so long as I am in this body I shall raise my voice and cast my vote as my conscience dictates, and nobody, whether he comes from Pennsylvania or from New York or any other State, can tell me or the people of my State what I should or should not do.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

I know the people of Wyoming and I know the standing of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] among his people. He can be reelected notwithstanding the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] and notwithstanding the administration. He can be elected on the Democratic ticket, he can be elected on the Republican ticket, or he can be elected upon an independent ticket in his State.

If you want to drive us out of the Democratic Party, if the Democratic bosses in New York and in Pennsylvania, Illinois, or any other boss-ridden State want to drive us out of the Democratic Party, they will not have any difficulty in doing so. I say to you now that if you nominate your Governor or if you should, perchance, be nominated for President of the United States, you will not have to drive some of us out of the party. We will quit.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I know that in 1928 while some of the members of the Cabinet were probably voting for Mr. Hoover the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] was standing by and working for the regular nominee of the Democratic Party.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

In his radio speech last night it was said the President had a right to expect some of us to support his Court plan. The President did not have any right to expect me to support his Court plan, because he knew, or should have known, that I would not do so. I told some of his advisers a year ago last January that I was not in favor of packing the Supreme Court by putting six new Justices upon it. If they carried that story back to him, as they should have done, he had no right to hope that I was going to support his plan.

Mr. President, I do not want to wash a lot of dirty linen on the floor of the Senate in the closing days of the session, but I want to say that overtures were made to me with reference to the Supreme Court plan and I was told that they wanted me to sit in with them and if I did not they would make deals with Tammany and certain other people and get it anyway, for in return they would promise to give them some Justices on the Court. If you want to wash the dirty linen of the Democratic Party, you can wash it, and if you want to quote men who have passed beyond and cannot challenge what you say, I could quote from some people, too. There is no dearth of material from which to quote regarding the Senator from Pennsylvania. One need not quote from some one no longer here. There are those who would now bear witness against the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The idea of quoting from our late beloved leader that he said so-and-so about some member of the Democratic Party, and that he regretted that he had gone out to Wyoming and suggested to somebody that the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] be appointed to the United States Senate. I shall not characterize that kind of statement made by any Member of the Senate. The mere recital of such statements characterizes the statements themselves, and characterizes the men who make them.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] can take care of himself in the State of Nebraska. He has always done so, and he always will be able to do so; but when the next election rolls around I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will come out to Montana, and I hope he will go down into Missouri, and I hope he will go to Utah, and I hope he will come out to Washington, and I hope he will go to Idaho, and I hope he will go to all of our Western States, but I hope he will not speak for any Democrat whom we want to see elected.

I was very happy and very proud to be the Vice-Presidential candidate with the late Senator La Follette. I considered him one of the great statesmen of his day, and I still consider him so. I ran for Vice President with him, not because I sought the nomination but because he came to my house and asked me to run as a candidate with him. In order that the Senator from Pennsylvania may know the facts, I will say that it was after the Democratic convention was held in Cleveland, and after the platform was drafted in Cleveland, that the late Senator La Follette came to my house. Mr. Davis had been nominated in the Democratic convention. Not long after that the Senator from Pennsylvania was out stumping for Mr. Davis, the same Mr. Davis whom he now renounces as an economic royalist. He supported Davis in 1924. I was at that convention, and I supported the candidacy of the present Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. When I felt that Wall Street had nominated the candidate on the Democratic ticket, however, I went out and supported the late Senator from Wisconsin, and at his request, I ran with him; but a lot of these so-called liberals and New Dealers, and political bosses in the various States who are now carrying the banner of so-called liberalism in this country, were all found lined up with the economic royalists of Wall Street in 1924, and they have always been in the same identical position. They have always been there, and they always will be there.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator's last statement. Would he mind repeating it?

Mr. WHEELER. I said that the political bosses from Pennsylvania and the political bosses from New York and the political bosses from Chicago would always be found lined up and voting with the economic royalists, as they did in 1924. In one breath they say to the Democrats of the country, "We want party harmony." Why, even the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania helped to finance a dinner in order to get Senators together for party harmony.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I hope the Senator will not imply by that statement that all who attended the dinner did so as the guests of the Senator from Pennsylvania, because I want to say for myself—and I know the same thing is true of many others—that I paid for my own dinner.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly. While the Senator from Pennsylvania was financing a dinner for party "harmony", and while preaching "harmony", these men go out and denounce Members who attended that dinner, and whom they were then patting on the back. On the one hand, some of these people denounce economic royalists, and, on the other hand, they try to shake them down before they are to testify before congressional committees, asking them for campaign contributions—shaking them down for campaign funds on the one hand, and denouncing them upon the other is their wont—great liberals! great progressives! Yes; great leaders of the unwashed of this country, friends of labor, if you please, and friends of the farmer!

When did you ever hear of a political boss being the friend of the farmers of this country? When did you ever hear of a political boss being the friend of the workingmen of this country?

Friends of these voters? Yes; they are the friends of all when they want votes. They are the friends of all when it pays—pays, if you please, to be liberal. Now it pays to be liberal. But where were they when there was only a small minority of liberals and progressives in this body? They were out, lined up with the utility interests, promoting utility companies, playing the game with the Mellon's, and playing the game with Wall Street.

If you want to wash any dirty linen, you may wash it, either upon this floor or upon the public platform; and I say to you:

Lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, with every effort to comply strictly with the letter and the spirit of rule XIX, I should like to say just a few words on the subject now under discussion. As one who was denominated last night over the radio, by the chairman of our party senatorial campaign committee, as an ingrate, I think it necessary to say just a word on that subject.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] did me the great honor to read to the vast audience that undoubtedly listened to him last night some remarks which I made in the campaign of 1934 which were accepted as a definition of the New Deal. He went on to say that my purpose in doing that apparently was to win favor with the President and secure the support of the President's followers, and it would not become me to say that that was not somewhat in my mind. I go one step farther, however, and say that in giving that definition of the New Deal I described, as I then saw it, this great liberal movement, of which I was glad to be a part; and it was not until I came to see that sometimes a new deal may quickly be changed into a rotten deal that I lost some of my enthusiasm for things that I had been supporting.

I call your attention, inasmuch as the Senator from Pennsylvania read these remarks on the radio, to the climax, if there was such, of the remarks, in these words:

The New Deal seeks to cement our society, rich and poor, manual workers and brain workers, into a voluntary brotherhood of free men standing together, striving together for the common good of all.

When I find that there are certain leaders in this country that seem to me to be fanning into flame the fires of class hatred, trying to set one class—call them "the underprivileged", if you will—against those who happen to have a little of this world's goods, then I say that I am not abandoning my firm belief in the principles of the New Deal as it was conceived, when I insist on going forward along that line, even though some may have decided that they want to go off strictly at right angles.

But what I really wanted to say, Mr. President, was this: Assuming that I did declare my faith in our great President in 1934, and assuming that I did go before the voters of Nebraska and say, "I want to try to help carry out these great objectives which I conceive to be the heart of the New Deal", does that mean that when I come to this body I must give my support to every means adopted to carry out those objectives, even though I am firmly convinced, with every bit of reason I have, that the means adopted are wrong, and are going to defeat the objectives that we have in mind?

I can conceive that it would be very much easier to sit here in the Senate and never be obliged to attend a committee hearing or meeting, or read any of the testimony of witnesses who are called, and not even read the bill before the Senate, but merely call the White House, or possibly the Postmaster General, to find out how I am supposed to vote. That would be a very easy thing to do, but I think a very unsatisfactory thing, so far as the voters of Nebraska are concerned, and I will include all of the Western States in that.

Pennsylvania may want that kind of representation in the Senate, and if they do, God bless them, let them have it; but to me it would seem that if the State is to have that kind of representation it might as well have a parrot in a cage in the Secretary's office, and bring it in when the Senator's name is called and have him say "Yes, Mr. President, count me for that, too." That is not my idea of what a Senator should do.

I much prefer the noble sentiment expressed by the elder La Follette on the floor of the Senate in another time of turmoil, when he said—and I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

I had supposed until recently that it was the duty of Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote and act according to their convictions. Quite another doctrine has recently been promulgated—

And I could interpolate there by saying, as recently as 10:30 last night—and that is the doctrine of standing back of the President without inquiring whether the President is right or wrong. For myself, I have never subscribed to that doctrine, and never shall. I shall support the President in the measures he proposes when I believe them to be right. I shall oppose measures proposed by the President when I believe them to be wrong.

Mr. President, that is the doctrine which I have endeavored to follow since I first came to the Senate. It has not been at all in accord with the ideas of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] as he enunciated them last night. I think he might well have left the Senator from Wyoming out of it and declared me the only ingrate in this matter, because I have voted against a good many measures that were administration measures, and I know of no vote I have cast in the Senate that I would change if I had it laid down before me right now; but I say that the Senator from Pennsylvania apparently has a very different conception of the duty and obligation resting upon a Senator from my conception, and if he wants to come to Nebraska in 1940 and argue that matter to the voters of Nebraska, I will meet him at the Missouri River line and gladly welcome him to the State, because I know of nothing that would make my almost unanimous reelection to the Senate more certain than to have the junior Senator from Pennsylvania come out and tell the voters of Nebraska the kind of stuff he uttered over the radio last night—cheap stuff, tawdry stuff.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess subject to the call of the Presiding Officer.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. There is a bill on the desk——

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. There is a bill on the table I should like to have acted on.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to call up a bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let there be order in the Chamber. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate take a recess.

Mr. BARKLEY. For the moment I withhold the motion. I will state why I am contemplating such a motion. The House has under consideration now the conference report on the housing bill, and it is contemplated that shortly the conference report on the deficiency bill will be ready for action. In the meantime there is no important business before the Senate, and I see no reason why we should be in formal session. I withhold the motion, however, for the present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I withdraw the motion for the moment.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement. Paragraph 2 of rule XIX reads as follows:

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

I think that rule is sound; I think the reasons for it are adequate. In a deliberative body such as the Senate we cannot transact business if personal attacks are to be made by one Senator on another Senator.

No matter how great the provocation may be, the rule should be enforced. If Senators are to indulge in personal attacks, then it should not be upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is a way to correct that—the rule providing how a Senator may be interrupted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Precisely.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator had his remedy. Does he mean to suggest that everything that happened here was out of order?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of what particular thing is the Senator complaining—the speech last night or the speech this morning?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The statement which I wish to make is with relation to my calling the Senator from Montana to order. My reason for that action, I want it known, was not because I think the Senator from Montana did not have every reason to desire to reply to the speech made by the Senator from Pennsylvania over the radio, but I called the Senator to order because I believe this body must require its Members to make personal attacks, if they are to be made, not on the floor of this Chamber, because if that practice is to be indulged in, we can no longer satisfactorily transact business as a deliberative body.

Since the Senator from Montana referred to the speech of my father at Madison Square Garden, I ask unanimous consent to have the excerpt from it dealing with the Supreme Court issue in the 1924 campaign inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is more familiar with his father's speech than I am, because I was in the West at the time. The platform provided for a constitutional amendment to correct the situation about which he was speaking.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. I was told by someone—I have forgotten who—that in his Madison Square Garden speech the Senator's father stated that the matter was to be submitted to the people in the form of a proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct. As the Senator has referred to the speech, I think it would be well to have that portion of it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WHEELER. I think it would be well to have it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPT FROM ADDRESS DELIVERED BY SENATOR ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, SR., AT MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, SEPTEMBER 16, 1924

Our platform upon this subject provides:

"We favor submitting to the people for their considerate judgment a constitutional amendment providing that Congress may by reenacting a measure make it effective over a judicial veto."

The only question raised in this campaign on this subject is whether the people shall have the right to have such a constitutional amendment as we propose submitted to them for their action. If they do not desire such an amendment, then, of course, they will vote against it when it is submitted and that will end the matter. If they do desire such an amendment, after the full public discussions which will follow its submission to the people in the manner provided by the Constitution, then clearly they are entitled to amend their Constitution in the manner proposed.

We favor submitting a constitutional amendment of the nature indicated to the people for their considerate judgment and determination.

Our opponents declare that such a proposed amendment shall not be submitted to the people for their consideration.

In this situation any extended discussion of the merits of the proposed amendment would be out of place, but a brief statement of the evils which have led the Progressives to propose submitting such an amendment to the people may not be amiss.

The facts are briefly these:

The Federal courts, particularly the Supreme Court, have declared unconstitutional or otherwise nullified the most important legislation enacted by the lawmaking branch of the Government within the last few days.

The first of these cases to which I call your attention are the celebrated income-tax cases: In August 1894 the Congress passed an act which provided in substance for an income tax on net incomes above $4,000. Such a tax had previously been upheld by the Court. When it came before the Supreme Court under the act of 1894, the principal features of the law were again held valid by the Supreme Court, though by a majority of 1 vote. On a reargument of the case one of the Justices changed his vote, though neither he nor anyone else has ever given any explanation of the change, and the whole law was declared null and void as being in conflict with the Federal Constitution. That the decision was based on the economic view of the Judges composing the majority of the Court was plainly apparent from both the majority and minority opinions.

Of the majority opinion, Mr. Justice Harlan, one of the dissenting Judges, said:

"The decree now passed dislocates—principally for reasons of an economic nature—a sovereign power expressly granted to the general Government and long recognized and fully established by judicial decisions and legislative action."

After nearly 20 years of protracted struggle an amendment to the Constitution was finally adopted which was intended to meet the objection of the majority of the Court to the constitutionality of an income-tax law.

The effect of this decision for the first 13 years after the Court had nullified the law was thus stated by the late Chief Justice Clarke of the Supreme Court of North Carolina:

"One man nullifies the action of Congress and the President and 75,000,000 of living people and in 13 years since has taxed the property and labor of the country by his sole vote $1,003,000,000 which Congress, in compliance with the public will and relying upon previous decisions of the Court, had decreed should be paid out of the excessive incomes of the rich."

In the Standard Oil and American Tobacco Trust cases which came before the Supreme Court a few years ago, the Court by another 5-to-4 decision overruled a number of carefully considered previous decisions and in effect rewrote the Antitrust Act.

That act as passed by the Congress and signed by the President provided that any contract, combination, and so forth, in restraint of trade should be void. In the decisions just referred to the Supreme Court by a majority of one, in effect, wrote the word "unreasonable" into the act, so as to make it read that only an unreasonable contract or combination was in restraint of trade.

By this judicial legislation the whole meaning of the act was changed, and under these decisions the Court has repeatedly held that those corporations and trusts which were prohibited by the act as adopted by the lawmaking branch of the Government were permitted by the act as it was amended by the Court. Of this action of the majority Judges, Mr. Justice Harlan, one of the minority, said:

"The Court now by judicial legislation in effect amends an act of Congress relating to a subject over which that department of the Government has executive cognizance."

The decision also clearly intimates that if Congress attempted to restore the law to its original form such act would be held unconstitutional.

In the recent cases of Hammer against Dagenhart the Supreme Court, by a bare majority of one, struck down one of the best laws ever enacted by Congress, which is commonly referred to as the child-labor law. By this act Congress sought to prevent employment of children in factories and mills under unhealthy and improper conditions by excluding from interstate commerce products of such labor.

The opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes in that case, in which Justices McKenna, Brandeis, and Clarke concurred, demonstrates beyond the possibility of a doubt that the law was plainly constitutional and that it was beyond any legitimate function of the Court to invalidate it.

The Congress shortly thereafter passed another law on the subject of child labor to meet the objection of the Court, and this law was also nullified by a divided Court.

The wealthy mill and factory owners employing child labor under the shameful conditions shown to exist have alone profited as a result of this judicial legislation, while the will of Congress and of the people has been defeated, and countless thousands of children have as a result of the Court's action been condemned to unwholesome labor which has stunted their bodies, dwarfed their minds, and made many of them public charges.

So in the still more recent case of Adkins against Children's Hospital a majority of the Court destroyed an act of Congress fixing a minimum wage for women and children in the District of Columbia.

Here again, by a majority of one, a measure designed to afford some protection to women and children in industry was destroyed. Mr. Justice Holmes demonstrated clearly the constitutionality of the act and plainly intimated that the opinion of the majority was not based upon the unconstitutionality of the law but upon their peculiar economic views.

These are only a very few of the cases wherein during the last few years the Court, by usurping legislative power, has nullified acts of Congress.

The judicial veto in practically all these cases has been leveled at progressive measures which enunciated a rule contrary to the economic or political beliefs of a majority of the men who happen to make up the Supreme Court. Tenement house, bake shop, workmen's compensation, 8-hour decisions, and many others of a similar nature could be cited to the same effect.

But it is not merely the number of cases in which the courts have nullified the acts of Congress that is important. It is the fact that each one of these decisions has closed the door to similar progressive legislation in the future.

Always these decisions of the Court are on the side of the wealthy and powerful and against the poor and weak, whom it is the policy of the lawmaking branch of the Government to assist by enlightened and humanitarian legislation.

Even when we have gone through the difficult and expensive process of amending the Constituton in a particular respect, as in the case of the income tax, the amendment finally adopted, as in that case, may be interpreted by a majority of the Court entirely opposite to the intention of Congress.

Other civilized countries adopt as a mere matter of legislative routine these remedial and corrective laws. But we can enact such laws only after many years of delay incident to securing a constitutional amendment with all the expense and labor involved, and very often five men on the Supreme Court Bench succeed in defeating such legislation forever.

Now, it is obvious that a remedy for this condition must be found. No government can long survive, if through the medium of a king, a court, or any other sovereign power the will of the people represented in the lawmaking branch of their government can be arbitrarily and finally defeated.

Our suggested constitutional amendment means simply this:

That whenever the Court assumes to nullify an act of Congress, the Court shall certify its decision with the reasons for making it back to the Congress, much as the President now certifies to the Congress his reasons for vetoing an act passed by that body. Thereupon the Congress, in the light of the opinion of the Court, the arguments of counsel, and with all the facts and circumstances before it, would reconsider the measure and the reasons of the Court for declaring it null and void, and if those reasons seem sufficient, it would be the plain duty of the Congress to acquiesce in the decision of the Court.

If, however, as shown by the cases I have mentioned, it appeared that the decision of the Court was based on economic or political opinions of the Judges and there was no real conflict between the Constitution and the law in question, it would be the clear duty of the lawmaking branch of the Government to repass the measure.

This method would have the advantage of giving to every piece of legislation, the constitutionality of which was challenged, a full hearing in the first instance before the Congress, again before the President when he signs it, and again a full hearing before the Supreme Court where every phase of the question could be discussed by able counsel, and finally there would be a rehearing before the Congress in which there would be available to Congress all the discussions and opinions of counsel and members of the Court before Congress finally acted upon the measure.

It is hard to conceive of a method which would insure to every matter of legislation, the constitutionality of which was called into question, a more careful, impartial, and exhaustive consideration than this.

Our opponents say that Congress may err and pass an unconstitutional law, and that the power must reside somewhere to declare such a law unconstitutional. We answer that the Congress and the President may sometime err in this respect, but it is just as true that the Supreme Court may also err and declare a perfectly constitutional act passed by Congress to be unconstitutional. That the Court has done this very thing again and again is fully established by the cases to which I have referred.

Either the Court must be the final arbiter of what the law is or else some means must be found to correct its decisions. If the Court is the final and conclusive authority to determine what laws Congress may pass then obviously the Court is the real ruler of the country exactly the same as the most absolute king would be.

Two points should be noted with reference to this proposed constitutional amendment:

First. No other great government exists in which the courts are permitted to nullify the will of the people as declared by their lawmaking bodies.

In England no power to veto acts of Parliament is possessed by the courts, and no English King has dared exercise a veto for generations. And yet the British Government still stands and there has been no "confiscation of property or destruction of liberty."

Second. The proposed amendment does not give State legislatures the power to reenact laws over the decisions of the Supreme Court. It relates only to acts of Congress.

Such decisions as that of the Supreme Court in the Oregon School case would not be affected.

Those who condemn as radical and anarchistic the very moderate and conservative method we propose submitting to the people for their consideration as a remedy for the fatal defect which has appeared in the machinery of our Government must be ignorant of the fact, I take it, that Chief Justice Marshall many years ago proposed this identical remedy. Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of Marbury against Madison, decided by the Supreme Court in 1803, first asserted for that Court the claim that the Court could nullify an act of Congress by declaring it unconstitutional.

Nearly a year later, however, when Justice Chase, of the Supreme Court, was under impeachment, the Chief Justice, in writing to Justice Chase, stated his views as follows:

"I think the modern doctrine of impeachment should yield to an appellate jurisdiction in the legislature. A reversal of those legal opinions deemed unsound by the legislature would certainly better comport with the mildness of our character than would a removal of the judge who has rendered them unknowing of his fault."

(See Beveridge's Life of John Marshall, vol. III, p. 177.)

This letter appears in the recent life of John Marshall, by former Senator Beveridge.

On this expression of opinion by the great Chief Justice, Mr. Beveridge says:

"Appeals from the Supreme Court to Congress. Senators and Representatives to be the final judges of any judicial decision with which a majority of the House was dissatisfied. Had we not the evidence of Marshall's signature to a letter written in his well-known hand it could not be credited that he ever entertained such sentiments."

That is Senator Beveridge's interpretation of this letter. I submit John Marshall's letter with Senator Beveridge's interpretation to all those who are criticizing this proposal as dangerous and revolutionary.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, just a word upon the matter now agitating the Senate.

When a man assails another man, I will always give the other man a chance to reply, as a matter of fair play. When a Senator of the United States over the radio last night assailed bitterly Members of this body, I never would call them to order in making their replies. They have a right to reply in any manner they see fit to adopt; and to call them to order means that we would hear one side of the controversy and not the other side.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, it was my good fortune to be listed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] as being with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], all of whom were to be read out of the Democratic Party.

I want to say that since the junior Senator from the State of Pennsylvania has become "custodian" of the seats in the United States Senate, I hope he will handle that job in a better fashion than he handled the job as Alien Property Custodian. We still need 96 seats in this body. I want to say that I welcome that opposition. I never have had the support of the bosses, and I do not need the support of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I realize what is wrong with the Senator from Pennsylvania so far as his attitude toward the Senator from Montana is concerned. It will be recalled that the Senator from Montana was a member of an investigating committee about 15 years ago, in connection with whose investigation the Senator from Pennsylvania played a part and was questioned about his past activities.

The Senator from Pennsylvania need not worry about ingratitude as he attacks the Mellons and economic royalists, because if it had not been for one member of the Mellon family the Senator from Pennsylvania would have been some place else now instead of in the United States Senate.

I want to say that in 1940, if I am a candidate for the United States Senate, I want the Senator from Pennsylvania to come into the State of West Virginia, and I will tell the people of the State of West Virginia some of the things that I know about the policies and practices of the Senator from Pennsylvania himself which, according to the rules, I cannot do on the floor of the United States Senate. I should like to tell about the contracts that have been let to his friends because of his great love for the New Deal. And may I say—no; I cannot do so, because the rules of the Senate prohibit—where part of it went, and where part of it has been used to pay the debt of the past.

No, Mr. President, I do not fear that opposition.

And what about gratitude, my friends, the Senator's gratitude to the Mellons and gratitude to the steel companies that paid the Senator from Pennsylvania as a lobbyist before he was a Member of the United States Senate? Where has it gone? Now he loves the workers, oh, so well, because the workers in the State of Pennsylvania have got the votes, and he has got what the lobbyists gave him before that time. He hopes to have both.

My friends, I am not worrying about the opposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I wish Senators could go back and read the American Mercury for November 1936. For some peculiar reason you cannot find a copy of that month's American Mercury in the Congressional Library, but you can get it in public libraries. Read the article in it entitled "Lord GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania." It gives you what I cannot give you about the Senator from Pennsylvania on the floor of the United States Senate without transgressing the rules of this body. It tells you about the trips to Mexico—oh, such a trip was made not so long ago again—and it also tells about the Alien Property Custodian, the experience of the great liberal of the State of Pennsylvania, the great new dealer, and it tells his background with the Sinclairs and the Falls and the Dohenys.

O Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania proclaims love for the common man. He loves the common man and has taken a lead as a new dealer to read out of the Democratic Party some of us who believe in honest government. He wants to run the honest men out, so that the bosses and corruptionists can have control. But, thank God, the American people will never allow that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I call the Senator to order on that statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia has taken his seat.

Mr. HOLT. I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I do not blame him one bit, because I know the reason. [Laughter.]

BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS AND RECEIVERSHIPS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2849) to prohibit certain agreements fixing fees or compensation in receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization proceedings, which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act to prohibit certain agreements fixing fees or compensation in receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization proceedings, to prohibit the appointment of certain persons as receiver or trustee, and for other purposes."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF WATER POLLUTION

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, the Nation is agreed that there is urgent need for effective efforts to prevent and abate water pollution.

An authority has said that if we do not destroy water pollution it will destroy us.

States, municipalities, health authorities, conservation organizations, leading publications of the Nation, numerous agencies of the Federal Government, and all thinking individuals, realize the necessity of a concerted program to curb this rapidly growing menace to our public health, our fish and wildlife, and to our navigation.

The need of a remedy has been asserted and echoed from one end of the Nation to the other for decades, yet pollution has increased, and pollution control has been a failure.

A friend was needed—someone to speak out in the interest of the defiled and polluted streams, someone to point out that the public health is being seriously endangered, someone to stop long enough during the turmoil of social and economic controversy to point to disease-spreading, health-destroying, germ-laden waterways as a greater danger to the public welfare than many of the social and economic ills holding our attention.

More than 4 years ago several leading individuals and organizations of the Nation did come to the rescue of the polluted waterway, and did organize a definite national movement to correct the evil.

After much work and study and many conferences, in which it was my pleasure to participate, there emerged a basic principle—based on cooperation with the States, and supported by Federal financial assistance and enforcement—which soon found its form in legislation introduced in Congress. The major objective of many bills introduced in both the House and Senate was to protect the public health. Some differed in the procedure for abating pollution, and it required many months of hearings before committees of the House and Senate, many radio adresses, a Nation-wide public information campaign through magazines, and innumerable discussions and debates in Congress, before the general, as well as the technical aspects, of combating water pollution were sufficiently understood to obtain action in the Halls of Congress.

Finally, the Senate Committee on Commerce made a favorable report on two measures which represented the best thoughts of experts, health authorities, and conservationists the country over. One of these measures was my own, and was based on a program of cooperation and financial assistance to States, municipalities, industries, and individuals; classification of the navigable waters of the United States into watershed areas so that uniform standards of purity could be established; and an enforcement program which simply proclaimed the jurisdiction of Congress over water pollution when it is serious enough to affect navigable waters, maritime activities, fish, and wildlife including migratory birds, and most important of all—when it affects public health. Such pollution was regarded as a public nuisance, and the enforcement principle provided for an action in equity, through district attorneys of the Federal Government, to prevent or abate such pollution. No penalty was intended, except that for contempt of any court order which the court might deem a righteous penalty for any particular polluter, depending upon the nature of the offense. Such enforcement is intended to apply only to the recalcitrant few who refuse to cooperate in pollution abatement efforts even after their neighbors have cooperated, and after they have been offered Federal financial assistance, help of experts in determining causes and remedies for pollution, and have been given every opportunity voluntarily to cooperate in a pollution-control program.

There was some opposition to this enforcement principle by those who misunderstood its objectives. The entire subject is so complicated that it was natural that many who believe in pollution control were opposed to enforcement provisions because they were not fully informed. Their objections were able to delay for more than a year any action on measures pending in the Senate, and during that time hearings began on measures introduced in the House of Representatives. With the completion of hearings there, which added volumes of information to the material already produced in hearings before the Senate, there still remained a few who raised opposition because they were uninformed, and they freely admitted that with all the discussions on the subject they had been busy on other matters and had not had opportunity to study the problem. This, of course, was their responsibility, and they cannot now be heard to ask for more information on this subject unless they want the Congress to expend more money for printing of hearings and documents and debates than it has spent on any other subject of like nature in many years. It is a subject that has been studied for decades. The need now is for action.

But the objectors who caused greatest delay were not the uninformed, but were the obstinate, willful violators who do not want to be inconvenienced by any form of enforcement in control of waterways, whether it be by State law or Federal law. This group is fully informed, and is well schooled in propagandizing. They have practiced it for years in the States by defeating local pollution control measures with the cry that "this is not a State problem; the polluters of this State will be placed at a commercial disadvantage with those in adjoining States where there is no control; this really is a Federal problem." And then they come to Congress, objecting, that "this is not a Federal problem, it should be handled locally." It is clear that this group wants no effective control of pollution at all.

And it is interesting to note that many of these same objectors soon began endorsing a House bill which sought to go as far as possible in remedying pollution by conducting research, distributing information, and offering loans and grants to the States, municipalities, and industries so they could on a voluntary basis, correct pollution if they wanted to. The objectives of this measure were to abate pollution, but in such a way that the worst of polluters could say: "I am not afraid of this plan. I can go ahead polluting if I want to, but if I find it convenient to abate pollution I can get Federal loans and grants for the purpose. Anyhow, if I have any trouble about it, it is all in charge of some of my friends here in the State who do not want to molest me." So comfortable did the polluters feel that they actually endorsed this plan and it easily passed the House on two occasions.

But the Senate of the United States did not agree.

The Senate had come to understand that pollution control, like flood control, must have some Federal supervision and enforcement. Waterways are no respecter of State boundaries. Flood control has long been recognized as a Federal problem and millions of dollars are appropriated by Congress for expenditure, in cooperation with the States, in preventing floods. And flood control and pollution control are twins. They should go hand in hand, although pollution continues to be a problem even when floods have passed.

This principle of Federal assistance to the States, with Federal enforcement, obtained the support of the American Wildlife Conference, which met in Washington at the call of the President, and by the Delaware Tri-State Antipollution Conference, the antipollution committee of the American Fisheries Association, the American Game Conference, the Pennsylvania Federation of Sportsmen's Clubs, the West Virginia Affiliated Sportsmen's Association, the Kanawha Game and Fish Association of West Virginia, the Norfolk, Va., chapter of the Izaak Walton League, the American Game Conference at its convention in New York, the National Audubon Society, and by practically all conservation organizations to which it has been presented, as well as the press of the country in general.

Most of us who took that view have had actual experience in work to combat water pollution. We learned by experience that about 80 percent of those who constantly pollute the Nation's waters will cooperate. But about 20 percent do not want to be bothered, are not interested, or think the expense is too great for them, even if offered outside financial assistance. Many of this minority actually regard the Nation's waterways as open sewers. A few are recalcitrant and place all possible obstacles in the way of enforcement, and get into politics to influence local boards and water commissions, so that they will not be bothered. There are, of course, an innocent few who do not cooperate because there may be at the time no known method of treating pollution at its source.

The 80 percent or more who cooperate soon see the ineffectiveness of their efforts, and the cry arises: "Why should I expend money in this program or give my thought and time to it, when my neighbor upstream refuses to cooperate?" Many times this cry is directed to a neighboring State, when the State upstream continues to pollute waterways flowing into another. Industries of one State proclaim loudly: "By requiring us to undertake this program you are placing us at a disadvantage with competing industries in our neighboring States who have no such bother."

Everyone who has had anything to do with pollution-control efforts knows these familiar cries. And they know they are effective. For who is to deny that it is absolutely futile to attempt any effective remedy on a cooperative basis when the whole effort can be nullified by a small minority? Pollution control's greatest enemy is its incompleteness, which destroys the morale and the cooperative spirit of those who know something should be done. No plan will succeed that does not undertake to bring the few obstinate recalcitrants into line.

It will be futile to spend Federal money and State money and to encourage municipalities and industries to spend their money in a program which only approaches a remedy. To be sure, a few hundred thousand dollars each year of the Federal Government's money, dumped into Government bureaus, and spent in loans and grants or on mild research efforts into a subject that has been studied to death already without any action to back it up, would help some. It would make a dent in the number of polluters, particularly in that group who can be shown that by installing treatment equipment in their plants they can actually produce byproducts which more than pay the costs of installing and operating the equipment. But, by and large, the Federal effort will be futile if the minority of willful, "don't want to be bothered" polluters continue to defile a waterway that others are seeking to purify.

And with these thoughts in mind, yet in the spirit of compromise that is necessary in all legislative efforts, the Senate adopted a substitute program which included all of the measure previously passed by the House, but added those provisions granting consent of Congress to compacts between the States in controlling pollution, classification of navigable waterways into sanitary districts, establishing of standards of purity in each such area, and enforcement which was made even milder by deferring for 3 years the date of its effectiveness to enable a complete study of remedies, and complete understanding by polluters of their opportunities for Federal loans and grants. This compromise measure passed the Senate.

I am confident that when the House of Representatives obtains a vote on this measure it will be adopted. Conferees have agreed to wait until the next session for final action. Those who have opportunity to study the problem further in the meantime will find, as they go deeper into the subject, that the enforcement principle is necessary, unless Congress desires to dump millions of dollars into a futile effort that will delay for many years the enactment of a really effective program. That, I feel confident, will not be the result. Instead there will come a genuine understanding of all who face this problem that pollution must be fought effectively, and no small minority of selfish interests should be allowed to stand in the way of a program that has as its chief objective the protection of our children and adults from such diseases as typhoid fever and other contagion, and possibly infantile paralysis and cancerous diseases, which are believed by some to have a close relationship to polluted waterways. If there is any public official who will admit that an organized minority of selfish interests is by telegram and threats and propaganda influencing him or her to stand in the way of effective laws to protect the health of millions of men, women, and children throughout the Nation, and of our wildlife and game, and our fish, and of our maritime interests and navigation—I say that such a person is not yet conscious of the trend of public opinion in this country on this subject. The flood of congratulatory telegrams that has come to those who have fought for the principle of Federal enforcement has come from individuals and organizations who do not have money nor time to engage in propaganda, but who do know and understand that right will prevail, and that their efforts in the public interest will be successful. Their devotion to the public service, without any expectation of gain, except as the Nation gains in health and other benefits from a Federal pollution-control program with enforcement, is the greatest argument in favor of the plan. With that spirit of the American people behind a program it cannot and will not fail, and the worst that can happen is a delay against the day when the public's conscience will be so awakened that it will bring this issue to a definite and final conclusion with enforcement far more drastic. There is a large group of Senators and some Representatives in Congress at this time who have urged me to include strong penal provisions, with fines and imprisonment for those who willfully pollute our waterways. In the spirit of compromise, however, and with full understanding of the problems a pollution-control program presents to manufacturers, such a plan was not adopted, and I say in all candor that the present pollution-control measure now in conference is mild, indeed, in comparison with what might become a compelling public demand if passage is delayed much longer. We may be assured that those charged with the administration of the law will be reasonable and fair. Every precaution has been taken to see that no injustice will be done.

PROGRESS OF RIVER AND HARBOR AND FLOOD CONTROL IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the increasing magnitude of the work for the improvement of rivers and harbors and for flood control which has been executed by the War Department under the supervision of the Corps of Engineers during the past decade is reflected by the increase in expenditures from about $70,000,000 for the fiscal year 1927 to about $233,000,000 for the fiscal year 1937.

The greatest increase in expenditure on waterway improvements of all kinds has occurred in the last 5 fiscal years—from $116,000,000 in 1933 to $233,000,000 in 1936. During this latter period about 60 percent of the work was performed under contract and about 40 percent by hired labor using Government plant.

In this statement I will cite some of the most important achievements in the Nation in river and harbor and flood-control projects, and append a summary as to what has been done and what is planned in my own State of Ohio.

As Ohio has been ravaged time and again by property-damaging and death-dealing floods, I naturally have a keen interest in legislation and public-works projects seeking to control floodwaters, and Ohio's position of leadership in water-borne commerce requires constant interest in projects to improve rivers and harbors.

Last January I introduced a bill (S. 1230) authorizing the appropriation of $150,000,000 to provide for control of the floodwaters of the Ohio River and its tributaries. Later it seemed desirable to attack the problem on a national scale, and so I collaborated with Senator BARKLEY, of Kentucky, in S. 1440, a bill which, in addition to flood control, provided for the improvement of navagability of rivers, for reforestation, and conservation of natural resources.

The bill S. 1440 would create the following public bodies: Ohio Valley Authority, Atlantic Seaboard Authority, Missouri Valley Authority, Arkansas Valley Authority, Columbia Valley Authority, Colorado Valley Authority, and Mississippi Valley Authority. An appropriation of $500,000,000 is authorized in this bill.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

The River and Harbor Act of 1935 adopted 246 new projects, or modifications of existing projects, with a total estimated cost of approximately $661,000,000, of which amount $318,578,000 had already been provided from the several emergency appropriations. About 1,000 river and harbor projects are now in force within the continental limits of the United States and in Puerto Rico, Alaska, and Hawaii, while active operations are under way on almost 400 of these projects.

With $130,000,000 provided in the regular 1936 War Department Appropriation Act and the Second Deficiency Act of 1936, together with an additional $305,000,000 provided from emergency funds during the past 3½ years, work on authorized river and harbor projects has been prosecuted at a rate never before attained. Some of the more important projects recently completed, or under way, include Boston Harbor, where dredging the 40-foot main ship channel is practically complete; Cape Cod Canal, whose enlargement has been advanced by the expenditure of more than $10,000,000 during the past 3 years; enlargement of anchorage areas in New York Harbor; and the improvement of the New York State Barge Canal. The 25-foot channel in the Delaware River from Philadelphia to Trenton has been completed; and funds in excess of $9,800,000 are being applied in deepening the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal to 27 feet. The Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway has been completed to provide a fully protected route for light-draft vessels between Delaware Bay and Miami, Fla., a total length of 1,435 miles.

On the South Atlantic and Gulf coasts the 30-foot channel at Morehead City, N. C., has been completed; the main 30-foot ship channel at Miami is practically complete, and deepening of Tampa Harbor is being prosecuted vigorously. The deepening of the Sabine-Neches Waterway of Texas which serves the important ports of Beaumont, Orange, and Port Arthur, has been accomplished at a cost of about $1,300,000. Work is progressing rapidly on the Houston Ship Channel and at Galveston, and the project at Brazos Santiago Pass was completed in 1936. The Intracoastal Waterway from the Mississippi River to Galveston has been opened to through traffic.

In the interior the canalization of the upper Mississippi to provide 9-foot navigation is about 67 percent complete. Work is proceeding on the construction of locks and dams on the Illinois Waterway. New locks and dams have been completed on the Ohio River and its tributary waterways. The improvement of harbors on the Great Lakes, with the construction of breakwaters and dredging of connecting channels has been continued.

The Fort Peck Dam in Montana has been closed across the Missouri River and is about 71 percent complete, and the Tygart Dam in the Monongahela Basin is rapidly approaching completion. These two dams provide flood-control storage in addition to their value to navigation. The completion of the stabilization program on the Missouri River to provide an adequate channel from the mouth of the river to Sioux City should be obtained simultaneously with completion of the Fort Peck Dam.

On the Pacific coast the widening and deepening of San Diego Harbor to 35 feet was completed in 1936 and a 30-foot channel to the city of Stockton, Calif., has been completed on the San Joaquin River. The construction of the Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River has passed the halfway point.

During the fiscal year 1936, 485,500,000 cubic yards of material were dredged, 3,800,000 cubic yards of rock were removed from harbors and waterways, almost 2,000,000 cubic yards of concrete were placed in structures, and over 2,700,000 cubic yards of stone were placed in jetties and breakwaters.

Water-borne commerce in the United States has shown a substantial recovery from the depression years. About 342,500,000 tons were transported in 1932, while for the calendar year 1935 the tonnage was 453,300,000 and the estimate for the calendar year 1936 aggregates 515,000,000 tons.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mississippi River flood control

The 10-year project for the control of floods on the lower Mississippi River authorized by the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, is more than 90 percent complete, and at the close of the fiscal year 1937 more than 600,000,000 cubic yards of earth had been placed in the levees under the Federal project. This volume represents more than twice the yardage excavated in building the Panama Canal. The original authorized expenditure for carrying out the adopted project for Mississippi River flood control was $325,000,000.

The peak rate of operations on the Mississippi River project was attained in the fiscal year 1934. The following tabulation shows the yardages placed in levees of the adopted project, together with appropriations for the past 5 fiscal years:

Fiscal year	Yardage placed in levees	Appropriation
1933	107,500,000	$47,500,000
1934	124,800,000	53,700,000
1935	65,900,000	29,000,000
1937	35,000,000	15,000,000

In addition to work on the main Mississippi River the War Department, under the act of May 15, 1928, has executed work on the Mississippi River between Rock Island, Ill., and Cape Girardeau, Mo., and on tributaries affected by Mississippi River backwater. Assistance has also been given to local agencies in the repair of flood-control works on tributaries of the Mississippi River threatened or destroyed by floods.

The original plan for Mississippi River flood control has been amended by the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1936, which authorizes the expenditure of an additional $272,000,000 on certain modifications and extensions of the project which time and experience have proved advisable to protect the major part of the alluvial valley, including the St. Francis and Yazoo tributary basins. Detailed plans have been prepared for carrying out the provisions of the amended project; and actual construction has been placed under way during the fiscal year 1937.

The value of the work which has been done along the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau to the Gulf has been exemplified this year. The previous great flood on the Mississippi, that of 1927, spread destruction throughout the six States of the alluvial valley causing a loss of almost 200 lives and direct property damages estimated at $200,000,000. With the adopted project practically complete the great flood of this year which devastated the unprotected Ohio Valley and caused direct damages there estimated at about $400,000,000, was carried to the Gulf without the failure of any part of the Federal system of protective works.

The project for navigation and flood control in Lake Okeechobee-Caloosahatchee drainage area of Florida which was adopted by Congress in 1930 has been practicaly completed; and the project for control of floods on the Sacramento River of California, adopted in 1910, is being continued.

Emergency flood-control projects

A number of important flood-control projects have been initiated by executive approval for prosecution with emergency funds for the relief of unemployment. These include the Muskingum River Basin reservoirs in Ohio, the Conchas Reservoir on the South Canadian River in New Mexico. The Tygart and Fort Peck Reservoirs, referred to under discussion of navigation projects, also fall in this category. Work has progressed satisfactorily on all of these propects. The project for construction of three dams on the Winooski is being prosecuted with C. C. C. labor under the supervision of the Corps of Engineers. In addition a large number of smaller flood-control projects, suitable for inclusion in a work-relief program, have been planned and executed by the Corps of Engineers. These range from channel improvements and flood walls in New England to the comprehensive Los Angeles flood-control project in California.

National flood control

The Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, established for the first time in the history of the Federal Government a definite flood-control policy which provides for its participation in the construction of economically justified flood-control projects throughout the United States in cooperation with States, political subdivisions thereof, or other local interests. The act provides that Federal investigations and improvements of rivers for flood control and allied purposes shall be under the jurisdiction of the War Department and that Federal investigations and measures for run-off and water-flow retardation and erosion prevention shall be under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture.

In addition the act of June 22, 1936, specifically authorized some 270 flood-control projects with an estimated construction cost of about $300,000,000. The projects authorized are located in 31 States and affect nearly every State in the Union. About 75 percent of the work authorized is for the protection of cities and towns where centers of population, industry, and concentrated property values intensify the flood hazard, or for important agricultural and industrial areas which include cities and towns. Notable among the projects authorized are reservoir systems on the Connecticut and Merrimack Rivers, reservoirs and channel improvements on the headwaters of the Susquehanna and Delaware Rivers in New York State, and reservoirs in the Alleghany, Monongahela, Kanawha, and Licking River Basins to protect Pittsburgh and other important centers of the Ohio Valley. Reservoirs, levees, and channel improvements were also authorized in the Susquehanna, Potomac, Wabash, Illinois, Sangamon, Arkansas, White, Los Angeles, Santa Ana, and many other river basins.

No appropriation was made by Congress for carrying out the provisions of this Flood Control Act, but funds have been received from emergency-relief appropriations which have permitted the Corps of Engineers to proceed with the preparation of detailed plans and estimates so that work could be started without delay when funds were appropriated and so that local interests could be advised accurately as to the exact conditions and cooperation which they must fulfill. In addition emergency funds are being expended on the construction of certain of these authorized projects which could be started quickly and were of a nature suitable for the use of relief labor. These latter include work in the headwaters of the Susquehanna in New York and on the Susquehanna in Pennsylvania; levees on the Arkansas River and continuation of the project for the protection of the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

SURVEYS AND REPORTS

Noteworthy progress has been made in the preparation and submission of reports authorized by the River and Harbor Act of 1935 and in review reports requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. In the 12 months prior to May 1937 the Chief of Engineers transmitted about 200 reports through the Secretary of War to Congress. Approximately 60 percent of the survey reports were favorable.

The River and Harbor Act of 1927 and the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, authorized an expenditure of $12,000,000 for surveys and investigations of the principal rivers of the United States, under the provisions of House Document 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, with a view to the formulation of general plans for the most effective improvement of such streams for the purposes of navigation, the most efficient development of potential water power, the control of floods, and for the needs of irrigation. Over a period of almost 10 years these studies have been prosecuted diligently. A total of $10,000,000 has been allotted to the task, and at the present time surveys on about 200 streams have been completed, and reports thereon have been transmitted to Congress.

These surveys, which were entrusted to the Army engineers, constitute an outstanding example of national planning for the development and conservation of water resources. The value of these studies and reports has been amply demonstrated. They have formed a vast reservoir from which useful public works have been selected for inclusion in work-relief programs during the years of the depression. The mass of factual data on the water resources of the Nation which they contain has provided a source of fundamental information to the administrations and planning boards inaugurated under the present administration. In addition the projects authorized by Congress in laying down a national flood-control policy were drawn almost entirely from the so-called "308 Reports."

The basic data and general plans for flood control contained in the "308 Reports" have been of great value to the War Department in its continuation of studies requested by Congress. The comprehensive report on reservoirs in the Mississippi River Basin which was transmitted to Congress in July 1935 is based upon data obtained through the "308" surveys. As recently as this year, after the disastrous flood of 1937, Congress, by resolution, called upon the Secretary of War to review the plans for Ohio River and Mississippi River flood control in the light of experience gained in that flood, and requested that plans be submitted for the flood protection of the Ohio Valley and to insure further protection for the Mississippi River Valley. The resolution referred to was dated February 10, 1937. The "308" studies for the Ohio River and its tributaries, and for other tributaries of the Mississippi were reviewed and plans were brought up to date so that the Chief of Engineers was able within 2 months to submit to the Secretary of War a comprehensive plan for the Ohio and lower Mississippi Rivers. This plan has been transmitted to the President and to Congress.

In addition to the "308" surveys the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to cause preliminary examinations and surveys for flood control to be made at some 220 localities and to continue surveys and studies at 18 reservoir sites. These examinations and surveys are being carried on as rapidly as funds permit.

JOHN T. ARMSTRONG

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 703) for the relief of John T. Armstrong, which was, on page 1, line 10, to strike out "when filed" and insert "if filed within 6 months after the enactment of this act."

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HUGO L. BLACK (S. DOC. NO. 118)

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document the speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], in which he set forth various letters and telegrams relating to the appointment of Senator Black as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, together with the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the remarks and telegrams submitted the next day by the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CANCELATION OF DEPORTATION OF JOHN G. TAYLOR

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request to proceed to the immediate consideration of a House bill. I want to take just a minute to state what it provides. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STEIWER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a House bill. I am sure there will be no discussion or no objection to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the bill on the calendar?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes. The bill is House bill 6468, and the calendar number is 1342. The purpose of the bill is to cancel an outstanding order and warrant for deportation. The Department of Labor favors this bill. It does not want to deport this person, but is obliged to do so under the existing provisions of mandatory law. The House has passed the bill. The Senate Committee on Immigration has considered it and reported it favorably. It is on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6468) to authorize the cancelation of deportation proceedings in the case of John Grinwood Taylor was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to cancel the outstanding order and warrant of deportation issued pursuant to section 14 of the Immigration Act of 1924 (43 Stat. 153, sec. 214) in the case of John Grinwood Taylor, any provision of existing law to the contrary notwithstanding. From and after the date of the approval of this act, John Grinwood Taylor shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same fact upon which the outstanding proceedings rest.

LON D. WORSHAM CO.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 7587, conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Lon D. Worsham Co.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Lon D. Worsham Co., a partnership consisting of Lon D. Worsham, Chattanooga, Tenn., and J. H. Clark, Ringgold, Ga., against the United States, arising out of contract W641 qm. 453, dated November 10, 1933, with the Quartermaster Corps of the United States Army for the erection of 28 Civilian Conservation Corps camps, for damages alleged to be the result of work performed in addition to that required by said contract, notwithstanding the alleged failure of the contracting officer for the Government to issue written orders for said extra work, and/or losses alleged to be the result of delays on the part of the Government in furnishing materials which it had agreed to supply.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, a bill adjusting the claim of the Lon D. Worsham Co. passed the Senate and the House and went to the President. The President vetoed the bill upon the ground that the evidence was sharply conflicting, and that the matter ought to be referred to the Court of Claims. Since that time the House has passed this bill, which merely refers the claim. It is a small claim for money due for the erection of certain C. C. C. camps by a firm of contractors.

As I have stated, the House has passed the bill referring the claim to the Court of Claims. I have conferred with the Chairman of the Committee on Claims of the Senate, and under the circumstances, since the matter has been fully considered by that committee, no objection is raised to asking for immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. What is the amount demanded by the claimant?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senate passed a bill calling for something like three or four thousand dollars, according to my recollection, but, in view of the President's message, the House has passed the bill merely referring the claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. KING. Is it claimed there was a breach of contract, or is it an action in tort?

Mr. GEORGE. It is not an action in tort. It is claimed merely that certain extra work was done, not upon written orders, and it is therefore a matter of accounting. That is the only question involved.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, why is not this claim properly presentable to the Court of Claims without legislation?

Mr. GEORGE. In its report the House substantially said that it was, but that there might be some technical question raised because of the fact that extra work was done without a written order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes; the absence of a written contract?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; that is the only reason why the matter is before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLEVELAND L. SHORT

Mr. LOGAN. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 1093) for the relief of Cleveland L. Short, and I submit a report (No. 1291) thereon. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the Senate and also at the request of Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland, chairman of the Committee on Claims of the House, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The bill involves the payment of $1,572.50 to Cleveland L. Short, who was injured in the Canal Zone. The chairmen of the Committee on Claims in the House and the Committee on Claims in the Senate are very much interested in the bill, because, if it goes over, then under a new rule which has been adopted by both committees it cannot be considered at the next session.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up for immediate consideration.

Mr. KING. Was the bill approved by the full committees of both Houses?

Mr. LOGAN. It was approved by the House committee and has the approval of all the members of the Senate committee I could find this morning. I did not get in touch with all of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1093) for the relief of Cleveland L. Short was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Cleveland L. Short, the sum of $1,572.50, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for permanent injuries sustained by him on June 14, 1909, while employed by the Isthmian Canal Commission: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ESKIMOS AND OTHER NATIVES OF ALASKA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S.

1722) to provide subsistence for the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska by establishing for them a permanent and self-sustaining economy; to encourage and develop native activity in all branches of the reindeer industry; and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 18, after "307)", to insert ": Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize the Secretary of the Interior to consolidate native-owned herds of reindeer with herds owned by others than natives prior to the purchase or acquisition of such herds of others than natives"; on page 7, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 13. Whenever, in his judgment, it is practicable and to the best interests of the natives the Secretary shall appoint natives to the supervisory and other positions in the administration of such reindeer industry or business.

On page 7, line 18, to strike out "13" and insert "14"; on page 8, to strike out lines 8 to 13, inclusive; on page 8, to strike out all after line 22 down to and including line 8 on page 9; on page 9, line 9, to strike out "17" and insert "16"; and on page 9, line 12, to strike out "18" and insert "17."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What were the House amendments?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have conferred with Delegate DIMOND and others interested in this legislation. I am advised that the amendments were minor in character and will benefit the measure. The main amendment proposes to give the Government the right of eminent domain in connection with the acquisition of reindeer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

ESTATE OF JOHN F. HACKFELD, DECEASED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 67) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the estate of John F. Hackfeld, deceased.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. DIETERICH, and Mr. AUSTIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

PERKINS-CAMPBELL CO.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is a claims bill, there being some small differences in amounts between the House and the Senate; but when they are all added up, it does not amount to very much money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

BENEFIT PAYMENTS TO COTTON PRODUCERS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not desire to run counter to the wishes of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], but I should like very much to have considered Senate Joint Resolution 205. It has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and is along the lines of the amendment adopted yesterday on the deficiency appropriation bill on motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of all that has happened with reference to the agricultural situation and the cotton situation, and the passage of a joint resolution through both Houses, which will be signed by the President, and which commits us to farm legislation at the beginning of the next session, I have had the impression that the Senator's joint resolution is not now necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this body has not ever definitely expressed a view except in the authorization amendment, which, on motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], was adopted yesterday to the deficiency appropriation bill. That, however, is merely an authorization; it does not indicate any view or wish of the Senate as to what should be done.

I grant that the joint resolution may not pass the House. The only reason I did not press it originally was in deference to the administration, which did not want it acted upon at that time because of the claim that what was desired could be accomplished by Executive order. It has not been done by Executive order, and I should like to have something to indicate to the President the view of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator understands that the joint resolution which was passed by the Senate a few days ago, and which was passed yesterday by the other House, was made a joint resolution for the purpose of requiring the signature of the President, so that both branches of the Congress and the Executive would be committed to legislation dealing with the control of surplus farm products at the very beginning of the next session. I think the issuance of the Executive order has been awaiting to some extent the passage of that joint resolution. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's desires about it, but it seems a little futile to take action on his joint resolution in view of the circumstances.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not want to run counter to the leader, and I shall not make the motion at this time if he objects, but I do want to submit some remarks on the subject.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want the Senator to put me in the attitude of objecting. I am merely trying to persuade him to let it go over to a little later time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will I have another opportunity to take it up during the present session?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will not attempt to keep the Senator from being recognized by the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words about this matter.

Senate Joint Resolution No. 205 was introduced by me sometime ago and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It was amended by that committee and reported by a unanimous vote. It deals with the marketing of the present crop of cotton. I have not pressed for immediate consideration of the joint resolution because some members of the Agricultural Committee consulted with the Secretary of Agriculture and the President regarding this matter; but I think that the Senate ought to express itself so as to indicate to the executive department that we really want this plan put into effect. It is identically the same plan that was adopted in 1935 by the President and the Secretary of Agriculture, which absolutely saved the cotton situation and saved the Government, too, because, instead of piling up a surplus at 12 cents, the cotton was sold and marketed and put into the channels of trade, and the farmer got 12 cents and the Government outlay was small.

The Secretary of Agriculture is not in the city and I do not know when he is going to return. If anything is going to be done about the cotton situation, it ought to be done now.

So, I very much hope that later on in the day I shall be able to secure recognition and obtain the consideration of this joint resolution. As I have said, it was reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry by a unanimous vote. Nobody seems opposed to it, but nobody wants to consider it; the leadership does not seem to want to take it up and have it considered. I think we are entitled to an expression of the Senate on the subject. We have nothing now to show to the Executive and the Department of Agriculture that this is the view of the Senate.

It is said the Secretary of Agriculture is in complete agreement with this plan, except that instead of a 10-cent loan, he wants to make a 9-cent loan. The price of cotton is now about 10 cents or a little below. A 9-cent loan would have the effect of reducing the market price because it would be said all over the country that that is the idea of the Secretary of Agriculture as to the value of cotton.

The large estimate made by the Department of a 15,000,000-bale crop is what has caused the rapid decline in the price of cotton at the present time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I know little or nothing about the loans the Senator is discussing. Is it the rule to loan the full value of the cotton?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not.

Mr. HUGHES. Then if 9 cents a pound is loaned, that does not fix the value of the cotton, does it?

Mr. CONNALLY. The value is supposed to be about 12 cents. What I am trying to suggest is this: In 1935 a 10-cent loan was made and by reason of cotton moving to the market, instead of declining the price of cotton increased and went above 12 cents and the Government lost nothing whatever on that part of the crop. If the Secretary of Agriculture fixes the loan at 9 cents it would be construed as representing his view as to what cotton is worth and the price will decline further. No money is saved under the Secretary's plan. He wants to loan 9 cents a pound and pay a 3-cent benefit, which would bring the total to 12 cents. Our plan is to lend 10 cents and pay 2 cents as a benefit. The Government will not save a dime by refusing to adopt our plan. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has the money and says the 10-cent loan is all right and sound, and the Government will not lose any money on it, that it is identical with the plan of 1935 which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation handled so satisfactorily.

I want the Senate to pass the joint resolution and let the Department of Agriculture and the executive department know what are the views of the Senate on the subject. The committee has reported it unanimously.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. What rate of interest is paid on these loans?

Mr. CONNALLY. I think it is 4 percent, and the Government is borrowing money for 3 percent. The shipbuilders have been getting money from the Government at less than 1 percent. The shipbuilders have borrowed money from the Government for as low as one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. President, the cotton situation is critical and ought to be met now. I do not know how long the Secretary of Agriculture is going to remain away from Washington, but if he does not act very promptly some farmers are going to have to take an economic vacation because the market is in a critical condition. This is the great export crop of America. The money the Southern people get for it is spent in New York and in the East for the manufactured goods of Delaware and Pennsylvania—if the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] is interested—and New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I should like to say to the Senator that Delaware is only partly a manufacturing State.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know it is a fine agricultural State.

Mr. HUGHES. Three-quarters of the State is agricultural.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know. I have been all over the Senator's State.

Mr. HUGHES. We grow wheat, corn, and tomatoes principally. We do have some manufacturing in Wilmington.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator comes from a very delightful State. I have campaigned all over it, from the northern end to the southern end. It is a State of lovely homes, fine horses, good-looking cattle, splendid people.

Mr. HUGHES. I express my gratitude to the Senator for having come to my State.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's State is in the agricultural section of the country but, fortunately, is prosperous. I know the Senator is not so ungracious when we help his State that he will refuse to help our section of the South.

Mr. President, the money we get for cotton is spent in all the other sections and is what helps to make the wheels go round. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who honors me with his attention, is aware of that fact, I am sure.

Mr. President, I should like very much to have immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yesterday, when we were discussing the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], I asked the Senator from Texas about the joint resolution. This is the one to which I then referred. I now should like to know whether section 1 of Senate Joint Resolution 205 is different from the amendment which on motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] was attached to the deficiency bill yesterday?

Mr. CONNALLY. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina was merely an authorization and an amendment of section 32 of the A. A. A. Act, whereas the joint resolution is really a mandatory instruction to the Department of Agriculture to do a certain thing.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understood that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina the Executive can do what is provided in the joint resolution or he can do less. He can fix the loan at 9 cents a pound instead of 10 cents.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not my question. As I interpret section 1 it not only authorizes but directs the payment of a price-adjustment sum. As I understood the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina it related only to benefits under section 32 of the A. A. A. Act and authorized only loans. Am I correct in that comparison?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina would permit benefit payments, but does not relate to loans. The Senator has the situation reversed. Under the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina there is no reference to loans because under the general law the Commodity Credit Corporation has the authority to make any loan it sees fit, but the amendment which the Senator from South Carolina offered yesterday did refer to benefit payments.

Mr. AUSTIN. As I interpret section 1, it is not a benefit payment that is provided. It is merely an adjustment payment to adjust the domestic market.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is a benefit payment in that it is a kind of bounty to the seller.

Mr. AUSTIN. As between what?

Mr. CONNALLY. He has to comply with the 1938 program. He does not get it until he shall have complied with the program next year.

Mr. AUSTIN. Whether he has complied or not, he gets the payment, does he not?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. I call attention to page 2, line 11.

Mr. AUSTIN. That has reference to loans.

Mr. CONNALLY. No. Here is what section 1 provides:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to pay to any producer of cotton (1) who sells, or has sold, between August 1, 1937, and July 1, 1938, inclusive, any cotton produced by him, and (a) shows to the satisfaction of the Secretary that he has during the year 1938 complied with any Federal farm program which shall have been enacted during the Seventy-fifth Congress, a price-adjustment payment.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is an adjustment of the domestic market to the world market?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is an effort to raise the price. To be very frank with the Senator, that is all it is.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it the Senator's view that it is wise legislation or proper legislation to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to pay out money to any person who has sold or who may sell, between August 1, 1937, and July 1, 1938, any cotton which has been produced by him?

There is no limitation upon the amount. It may be $100,000,000. We do not know the amount of cotton that will be produced during the period indicated. It seems to me it is an unlimited demand upon the Treasury of the United States, or upon some funds under the control of the United States. There is no limitation.

In the case of anybody who has raised cotton, it will be necessary to buy it and pay for it. Is that wise legislation? Is that proper legislation?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall answer the Senator.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. BILBO. I should like to know the status of this matter. Has the Senator from Texas called up his joint resolution?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has not gotten it up. He is expressing a desire to get it up, but he does not want to run counter to the plans of the leader. I am not doing this to put the leader on the spot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Mississippi that there is no motion pending. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. BILBO. Will the Senator from Texas permit me to make a statement with reference to the joint resolution?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I should be compelled to object to the consideration of this joint resolution, not because I am not in sympathy with what the joint resolution seeks to do, but because we had a very definite agreement with the President and the Secretary of Agriculture when this matter was brought to their attention by a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, and the pointed question was asked whether it would be necessary to pass mandatory legislation in order to effect the purposes set out in the joint resolution of the Senator from Texas; and it was agreed that there was adequate law now existing to carry out the purposes of the joint resolution of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. As a matter of fact, there was not adequate law, because we had to enact a new amendment to the law here yesterday.

Mr. BILBO. That was discovered afterward, and that small defect has been taken care of by an amendment to the third deficiency bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator a question. If the Department has authority to do and is going to do substantially this, what is the objection to letting the Senate speak and say what it wants to have done?

Mr. BILBO. Nothing except a gentleman's agreement between the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate.

For that reason I should be compelled to object to the passage of mandatory legislation, when the President has agreed to do exactly what is proposed in the Senator's joint resolution. The only difference is that there has been no agreement on the exact amount of the loan. There was no agreement as to whether the loan would be fixed at 9 cents or 10 cents a pound; but, regardless of that fact, the ceiling has been fixed at 12 cents, and that is what the joint resolution of the Senator from Texas provides. The farmer is guaranteed 12 cents a pound. Whether he gets 2 cents or 3 cents in benefit payments will depend on whether the pegging price is made 9 or 10 cents.

With that understanding and agreement with the President and the Secretary of Agriculture, as chairman of the subcommittee I should be compelled to object to passing mandatory legislation. I have faith in the President and the Secretary that they will give to the farmers the benefits and blessings set out in the Senator's joint resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Senator from Texas was not present at these conferences. Of course he readily accepts the statement of the Senator from Mississippi as to what transpired there; but, at the same time, I did not know that the gentlemen who attended the conference had authority from all the rest of us to bind us as to what the Senate might do. I cannot get the joint resolution up, of course, if there is objection.

Mr. BILBO. I want to assure the Senator that I am not trying to speak for the Senate. I am speaking only for the committee and those who were parties to the agreement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand. Of course, I cannot get the joint resolution up if the Senator from Mississippi objects; but I desire to remind the Senator from Mississippi that if the Senator from Mississippi had such an agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture and the executive department, the plan ought to be carried out, and it ought to be carried out now.

I hold in my hand the Wall Street Journal of this morning. Cotton is closing from 4 to 9 points off; and until the Secretary promulgates his plan it is going to continue to go down. While they are fiddling here the market is declining not only in Wall Street but in Mississippi and in Texas. I am unwilling to have this session of Congress adjourn without Congress speaking its mind about this proposition.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. The agreement had between the President and the Secretary of Agriculture and the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry——

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator will put that agreement in the RECORD right now, so that we may know what it is.

Mr. BILBO. This is about the third time I have put it in the RECORD.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to have it put in until we all know it.

Mr. BILBO. I want to get the Senator from Texas straight on one proposition. He asked the question, "Why do they not act?" Our agreement was predicated upon the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 207.

Mr. CONNALLY. That joint resolution has passed.

Mr. BILBO. About 30 minutes ago we concurred in the amendment put on that joint resolution by the House, and it is now the law; and I presume the President and the Secretary of Agriculture will carry out their agreement, since we have now, about 30 minutes ago, done our part.

Mr. CONNALLY. What was the agreement? Please tell us what the President agreed with the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BILBO. The President and the Secretary of Agriculture agreed to guarantee to the farmers 12 cents a pound for the 1937 crop.

Mr. CONNALLY. In what way? How are they going to guarantee it? Give us the details.

Mr. BILBO. On condition that the Congress would enter into an agreement, through the joint resolution which I introduced, which the President had before him at the time, to make the enactment of farm legislation the first business of the next session of Congress, whether it is a called session or the regular session in January. The question whether the bottom of the cotton price should be fixed at 9 or 10 cents was discussed in the conference, but there was no agreement as to whether it would be 9 or 10 cents. The Secretary insisted on 9, and the committee insisted on 10.

Mr. CONNALLY. And, of course, the Secretary won, as usual.

Mr. BILBO. He has not won yet.

Mr. CONNALLY. He will win if Congress adjourns and takes no action. He will understand that he may do as he pleases. All the Senator from Texas asks is that we shall pass this joint resolution and let the Secretary know what the Senate wishes to have done about the matter. The Senator from Mississippi prefers to have Congress adjourn and let the Secretary do as he pleases.

Mr. BILBO. The Senator from Mississippi has put himself on record as being willing to stay here until Christmas, if necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes; but the Senator is not going to stay here until Christmas.

Mr. BILBO. The only thing we were trying to get for the farmer was 12 cents for his cotton.

Mr. CONNALLY. Have you got it?

Mr. BILBO. We have it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Where is it? What is the market doing, then? It is going down. Where is your 12 cents?

Mr. BILBO. The market is not going down because the Government is going to guarantee 12 cents for the farmer. The market is being manipulated down by the cotton speculators and manipulators so that they may get the cotton as cheaply as they can before it gets out of the hands of the farmer.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from Mississippi if he does not consider that fixing a 9-cent loan basis will have a tendency to reduce the price.

Mr. BILBO. I thoroughly agree with the Senator, and that is the reason why I have insisted on a 10-cent bottom to the price of cotton.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator object to the Senate agreeing with him, and putting itself in the position of saying just what the Senator says?

Mr. BILBO. I have already said that I am in thorough sympathy with the purposes of the joint resolution of the Senator from Texas; but I am in honor bound to object to it, because I have this agreement through which the farmer will get 12 cents for his cotton. That was what I was after. He may get 9 cents of it this year and 3 cents next year, or he may get 10 cents of it this year and 2 cents next year, but he will get 12 cents in the end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall continue to have the floor until the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] returns, because I do not want to make this motion in his absence.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not have an opportunity to answer the Senator's question. I shall answer it right now.

Mr. KING. May I supplement it?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. KING. Where does the Senator find authority for giving blanket authority either to the President or to the Secretary of Agriculture to make drafts upon the Treasury of the United States to peg cotton at 10 cents a pound, or 7 cents a pound, or any amount whatever? If we are going to give unlimited authority to peg prices on cotton, why not on everything else?

Mr. CONNALLY. We have it on every agricultural product. We have it on sugar.

Mr. KING. There is a quota on sugar; that is all.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, that is pegging. We have it on dairy products. Forty million dollars has been taken out of this fund to be used for dairying, and it is all right. I am for every agricultural product. I am not standing here asking for aid for cotton alone. I am for taking care of the sugar people in Utah and in Wyoming and the other States. I am in favor of taking care of the cane-sugar producers in Louisiana. I am in favor of taking care of the labor in Massachusetts, and the manufacturers where they are entitled to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A number of Senators who participated in the cotton agreement are not now on the floor. I think they ought to have an opportunity to hear the discussion and be here. Therefore, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Andrews	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pope
Ashurst	Davis	King	Radcliffe

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah asked the Senator from Texas a question, as to whether or not it was sound to pay benefits to farmers in the matter of selling their cotton.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not make my question very clear, or the Senator misapprehended me.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then I ask the Senator from Utah to make his question clear, because I desire to answer.

Mr. KING. I desired to ascertain whether the Senator believes it would be sound legislative policy to give unlimited authority to the President, or to the Secretary of Agriculture, to make drafts on the Treasury to pay any amount, on any commodity, whether or not a price were fixed, or any limitation were fixed upon the contract.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall answer the Senator. The measure under consideration does not do that. It simply refers to a special fund which Congress created in section 32 of the A. A. A. Act, which was offered on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Texas as an amendment.

That fund is constituted by the appropriation of 30 percent of all revenues from tariffs into a fund for the payment of agricultural benefits, not to cotton alone, but to any agricultural commodity. In 1936 there was accumulated in that fund $125,000,000; $20,000,000 of that has already been used by the Department, not for cotton, but for other purposes—commodities growing in other States in the North and the East. It is proposed now to use $40,000,000 more of that fund in behalf of the dairy interests, not in my State, but in New York State and in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Missouri. Now because we southern Senators come along, because cotton is in distress, other Senators desire to deny the relief we request.

Mr. President, of course it is not sound to pay a bounty to do anything, if we go back to the elemental laws of economics. Neither is it sound, I shall say to the Senator from Utah, to have a protective tariff. But if the producers of agricultural products must pay high tariff duties for the enrichment of manufacturers and those engaged in commerce, and must pay for the benefit of those who labor in industry—not for the enrichment of the Treasury, but for the enrichment of the manufacturers and others—is it not just that a part of that tribute, 30 percent of it, be appropriated to recompense in a way the farmers?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think I did not make myself clear. I was not discussing the propriety or the impropriety of paying bounties, or the properiety or impropriety of a tariff, although I will say to the Senator that I am not a tariff man.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand.

Mr. KING. The point I had in mind was, assuming that we wanted to pay a bounty or contribution to the farmers or the dairymen, whether it was wise or sound to say that it may be done by the Secretary of Agriculture and by the President without fixing the limits of the amount that may be paid.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am in general agreement with the Senator from Utah. In the matter of these farm benefits, Congress cannot fix any hard-and-fast rule, because the markets and the conditions vary, and those benefits are paid under the general term of existing law—the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Soil Erosion Act—but Congress itself cannot follow the market from day to day and vary the payments.

Mr. President, it is just as sound to give an agricultural benefit payment, or a tariff adjustment on agricultural commodities, as it is to put a high protective tariff on copper in Arizona and in Utah, or a high protective tariff on textiles in New England and in the Middle States, or a high protective tariff on the shoes that we wear, or to pay a subsidy for silver. I wonder where all the silver Senators are.

Mr. LEWIS. Looking for gold. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it seems to be all right to do something in order to raise the price of silver, which God Almighty placed in the earth, and all in the world that is required is for man to lift it to the surface; but it does not seem to be all right to ask for a subsidy for those who are obliged to go out and work in the burning sun to raise what we must have to eat and to wear.

Mr. President, this piece of legislation ought to be enacted, and it ought to be enacted now. I hope the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] will come into the Senate Chamber soon. I hope someone will call him in. If he wants to object to the measure, let him object.

Mr. President, I hope the time will never come in this Republic when an executive department such as the Department of Agriculture or anyone else can say to Congress, "We will do this. You keep your hands off it. We will attend to this." Some Senators seem to take an attitude favoring such a position. A little gentlemen's agreement was had by some Senators with the Secretary of Agriculture, and then those Senators say, "No; Congress will not act. We will let the Secretary act." But he will not act. Why, they said they wished to have this resolution passed pledging Congress to pass an act applying to general agricultural conditions early in January.

That is all right. Everybody is for that. Everyone knew for the past 3 or 4 weeks that we were going to pass that resolution, and it has been passed. The bond has been fulfilled.

I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO].

Mr. President, if the executive departments are going to put this plan into effect, I have no objection to their going ahead and doing it. I do not want Congress to adjourn without my knowing that I have undertaken and that I have striven to get some results at this session of Congress. I know there are those who always want Congress out of town. Some executive departments always want Congress at home, because when we have gone home we are not here to annoy them; we are not here to control them. They want appropriations, however, and the attitude of some of them seems to be, "Pass the appropriation bills, and then let Congress go home. We can run the Government if Congress will just give us the money."

Mr. President, this cotton situation needs action, and it needs it now—not next week or next month or next year, but right now.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the able Senator is attributing too much importance to Congress. My experience is that the departments do not pay much attention to whether we are here or whether we are not. They prepare legislation and send it down to us, and we are expected to O. K. it; so Congress is quite unimportant. They proceed to do whatever they have in mind to do, and then they have deficits, and send reports of their deficits here, and it is expected that we shall pass bills to meet their deficits.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to have the views of the Senator from Utah because no more industrious or more capable Senator is on this floor than the Senator from Utah. I marvel how he can know so much as he does about all the Government departments. I should have to work much harder than he in order to have the information and the knowledge about the Government departments that the Senator from Utah possesses.

Mr. President, a question was raised about the right of cotton to receive benefits. I am not asking for cotton alone. The amendment of section 32 was not restricted to cotton. It helped the dairymen out in Wisconsin. It helped the hog raisers and the corn farmers out in Iowa. It helped the cattle raisers in New Mexico. It helped, and does help, every agricultural commodity that America produces. I am not sectional and I am not narrow when it comes to taking care of the agricultural interests of the Nation. But, Mr. President, let me say that the people of the United States outside of the cotton region do not properly appreciate the fact that we have to maintain our foreign markets for cotton. For half a century cotton has been one of the great export crops. It has helped maintain our balance of trade. It has brought to America money with which we have been able to buy the products of other sections. However, American cotton is threatened by the tremendously low prices which the estimate of the Department of Agriculture of a 15,000,000-bale crop produced within the past few days. We are not going to make 15,000,000 bales. Since the facts upon which that estimate was based came out, the sun, the drought, and the insects have already made raids upon the cotton crop of the South, and we shall never raise the 15 000,000-bale crop that it was estimated would be raised. Yet that 15,000,000-bale estimate is sitting astraddle of the cotton farmer and astraddle of the market and bearing it down every day.

So, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 205, being the resolution not asking but directing the Secretary of Agriculture to make these loans for 10 cents, and to pay a benefit payment of 2 cents per pound out of section 32 of the tariff fund in the interest of cotton.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to ascertain from the Senator from Texas why the passage of this joint resolution is necessary. I will start with the history of this program. In 1933 the first cotton loan was made. That loan was made after Congress had adjourned. I arranged that loan with Mr. George Peek. No one else was present. No legislation was passed. Apparently the Government had authority, and the President was advised by the then general counsel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Mr. Stanley Reed, that there was authority in the law for the loan.

Mr. CONNALLY. Authority to make the loan is in the law now, but nobody is making it. The joint resolution instructs them to make the loan. In the joint resolution the law about making the loan is not changed. The Commodity Credit Corporation right now has authority to make this loan, but it is not being made.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wanted to ascertain from the Senator from Texas whether he was under the impression that the enactment of further law was necessary to authorize the making of the loan.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Secretary of Agriculture wants to make a 9-cent loan.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am trying to get the facts in the RECORD, because the Senator knows my attitude. I am staying over here tomorrow to plead for a 10-cent loan. I make that statement so that the Senator may understand my motive.

Mr. CONNALLY. The resolution directs a 10-cent loan to be made.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it necessary to have anything in the joint resolution to be passed other than to provide for making a 10-cent loan mandatory?

Mr. CONNALLY. Not if the departments carry out what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] says they agreed to carry out; but they have not done it as yet.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am willing to risk their doing it. If the President or the Secretary of Agriculture say they will do it, I am willing to risk its being done.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am talking about the Secretary. I do not know what the President said, but I did talk to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not the Secretary of Agriculture who is going to make these loans; it is the Commodity Credit Corporation, which is subject to the direction of the President, and not the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is very true.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was not present at the conference, but I have been told by those who were present that the President has agreed to make the loans and is awaiting the signature by him of a joint resolution, which he felt ought to be passed. That joint resolution has not reached him as yet, but will reach him during the day. It passed the House only last night.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is correct in that the Secretary of Agriculture does not make these loans; but I talked with the Secretary of Agriculture; I know he is determined, if he can, to fix the loan at 9 cents; and he is going to be consulted, and I am afraid his views are going to control. If the Congress wants to let him determine the matter, very well; but I am trying to have it determined by Congress, which I thought was the lawmaking body. I have been under the impression for a good many years that, under the Constitution, Congress, and not the Secretary of Agriculture, was the lawmaking body. I have not talked with the President. I have not undertaken to quote the President; I only know from what others have told me as to what is the President's attitude; but I do know the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture. I know he wants to fix the loan at 9 cents and then pay 3 cents bounty between that and 12 cents. So the Government will not save a nickel, and all that will happen will be that fixing the loan value at 9 cents will bear the price down lower. I want to maintain a competitive price, a high price, so that the Government will not lose as much as it otherwise would. If there is a competitive market and the price goes on up, the Government will not lose so much on the bounty or benefit payments.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 205.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I reserve the right to object, and under such reservation I desire to make a statement.

I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and was selected as a member of the subcommittee to confer relative to the form of a cotton loan and whether or not a cotton loan could be authorized and made. The agreement was complete save on one point, and that point was whether or not the loan should be made at 9 cents per pound or at 10 cents per pound.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator says the agreement was complete. I wish he would at least state for the benefit of those who do not know the facts with whom the agreement was made. He has not yet stated that fact.

COTTON LOANS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The subcommittee consisted of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], and myself. The conference was held at the White House. In that conference the President and the Secretary of Agriculture participated. The matter was given rather thorough consideration, and every point that was suggested was in agreement, save whether or not loans would be authorized at 9 cents a pound or at 10 cents a pound. The committee was unanimous in favor of the loan being made at 10 cents per pound.

The Secretary of Agriculture expressed the opinion that it would be better to make the loans at 9 cents rather than 10 cents per pound. The reasons that were given are obvious. I might state that one of the reasons given was appealing. A large percent of our cotton must move in world trade; the cheaper cotton becomes, of course, the more likely it is that cotton will have a chance to compete with cotton produced by other nations; and if it is true that a 9-cent loan will fix a 9-cent price for cotton, and a 10-cent loan will fix a 10-cent price for cotton, those who are in favor of selling cotton abroad to the largest possible extent would naturally favor a 9-cent loan. The committee did not share in that viewpoint, because the committee believed, and so expressed itself at the conference, that if a 9-cent basis for the loan is fixed cotton will gravitate to a 9-cent price. On the other hand, the committee were of the opinion that if the loan were fixed at 10 cents per pound cotton would not sell for less than 10 cents on the domestic market.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that under this same plan, which was adopted in 1935, by reason of disposing of the surplus the market continually improved and finally the price went above 12 cents?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator from Texas states the history and record correctly. The loan in 1935 was fixed on a basis of 10 cents per pound. After the 10-cent basis was fixed the price in the American market began to improve, and shortly cotton was selling above 10 cents per pound on the domestic market; and, because of the increased price of cotton, due to the loan, the Government was called upon to loan but a small amount of money and consequently acquired practically no cotton under the 1935 loan plan.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It might be well for the Senator to state that the first announcement in 1935 stated that the loan would be 9 cents a pound. The announcement was made one night; the next day this body went into action; an effort to suspend the rules succeeded, and a resolution making a 10-cent loan mandatory was passed. The Senator will recall that that got caught in a jam, in a filibuster, the President and a committee conferred, and it was finally agreed to raise the loan to 10 cents a pound. So the Senate acted on the subject once before, and the President acquiesced.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is the opinion of the Senator from Oklahoma that a 10-cent loan will cause a far less drain upon the Federal Treasury than will a 9-cent loan. If the loan is made at 9 cents, in my judgment the price of cotton will go to 9 cents. That will mean a subsidy payment, an adjustment payment, sometime later of 3 cents per pound, or $15 per bale. If the loan should be fixed at 9 cents, and the price should go to a point around 9 cents, many loans would be called for, in the hope on the part of the applicants of holding the cotton for a higher price. If that should happen, then, when the adjustment is to be made the Treasury will be called upon to pay a straight-out 3-cent adjustment or subsidy, or $15 per bale. That will mean an increase in the subsidy payment, in my opinion, of the sum of $5 per bale and a drain of that excess sum upon the Treasury of the United States. I think that analysis cannot be gainsaid.

So I very much hope, Mr. President, that the authorities will fix the loan value at 10 cents per pound, as the growers of cotton need the money and need it now.

My State was a severe sufferer last year. Instead of raising 1,000,000 bales of cotton, as it ordinarily does, scarcely 350,000 bales were raised. The farmers of my State had practically no income last year, save that from wheat in the northwest area. In my State, one-half of which is devoted to cotton, the income was practically cut off. So this year, with a fair cotton crop, we will probably raise between 800,000 and a million bales, and even with a 10-cent loan the income to the farmers of that section of my State will be vastly improved over what it was a year ago.

Mr. President, the Congress has already passed Senate Joint Resolution 207. After the preamble, the resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That abundant production of farm products should be a blessing and not a curse, that therefore legislation carrying out the foregoing principles will be first to engage the attention of the Congress upon its reconvening, and that is the sense of the Congress that a permanent farm program based upon these principles should be enacted as soon as possible after Congress reconvenes.

Mr. President, because of the passage of that joint resolution farm legislation will be the first order of business at the next session of Congress. Some farmers and friends of farmers are criticizing the Congress for not now remaining in session to enact legislation to help agriculture, yet our critics do not suggest any solution of the ills that beset those who till the soil.

The farm problem has not as yet been solved. Farmers are confronted by two price influences over which they have no control—one, fluctuation of the value of money; and the other, fluctuation in the quantity of production.

MONEY AND PRICES

The farm problem is a price problem. The value of the dollar controls the general price level; hence, when the dollar value rises, prices fall; and when the dollar value falls, prices rise.

The dollar value is man-made and man-controlled; hence the point of value and the control of such value are all-important to farmers, wage earners, producers, manufacturers, contractors, investors, and the public generally.

PRODUCTION AND PRICES

All must agree that an overproduction of any given product will cause the price of such product to fall, and an underproduction of any given commodity will cause the price of such commodity to rise.

Farmers recognize the influence of these two economic laws and are demanding that both laws be recognized and taken into consideration in the enactment of new agricultural legislation.

TWO SUBCOMMITTEES

The Senate Agricultural Committee recognizes these two price influences and has appointed two subcommittees; one to consider and report upon the adjustment, regulation, and stabilization of the value of the dollar, and the other to consider and suggest plans for the adjustment, regulation, and stabilization of production of the basic farm commodities.

The subcommittee appointed to consider the influence of the value of the dollar upon prices has completed its hearings and will have its report ready to submit when the Congress reconvenes. The subcommittee appointed to confer with farmers at convenient points near their homes relative to farm conditions, farm credits, and farm prices, and the kind of legislation that will serve and be agreeable to farmers, will start hearings immediately to the end that legislation may be formulated and made ready to report to the Senate on the first day of the next session of the Congress.

EXPLANATION OF DOLLAR VALUE ON PRICES

It is now admitted by all that the value of the dollar changes, or is made to change, from time to time. All agree that as the dollar becomes more valuable prices fall, and as the dollar becomes cheaper prices rise. The farmer neither has control over the value of the dollar, nor even knows when changes are contemplated.

Prof. E. W. Kemmerer in 1927 made the following statement:

In a little less than a half century here in the United States we have seen our yardstick of value, namely, the value of a gold dollar, exhibit the following gyrations: From 1879 to 1896 it rose 27 percent; from 1896 to 1920 it fell 70 percent; from 1920 to September 1927 it rose 56 percent. If, figuratively speaking, we say that the yardstick of value was 36 inches long in 1879, when the United States returned to the gold standard, then it was 46 inches long in 1896, 13½ inches long in 1920, and is 21 inches long today.

Until recently the value of our dollar has been under the exclusive control of those who dominate the banking and financial policies of our Government. Through the control of money and credit allowed and permitted in circulation, such persons have made prices and price trends, and, knowing in advance just what was to be done and the effect of such banking and monetary policies, they and their friends have profited to the extent of their abilities and their desires.

Farmers now know that they cannot possibly receive fair and just prices for their products unless and until the general price level is properly adjusted, regulated, and stabilized. They know that prices depend upon the value of the dollar, and that there can be no stability in agricultural prices until the value of the dollar is properly determined, regulated, and stabilized.

Those who heretofore have had the power to manipulate the value of the dollar object to surrendering such power. Money management through control of currency and credit permitted in circulation has been for 100 years the racket of international bankers.

Farmers, producers, wage earners, and industrialists demand a properly valued dollar and that such properly valued dollar shall be stabilized. When our dollar is properly valued so as to do justice to the investors and consumers on the one side and to the producers and debtors on the other, and thereafter such dollar value is stabilized, then one of the major problems confronting farmers will have been solved.

PAST FARM EXPERIMENTS

Eight years ago, in an attempt to assist the farmers, the Congress created a Farm Board and gave such Board $500,000,000 with which to increase and stabilize farm prices. The Farm Board undertook to help the farmer by trying to control prices on the several commodity exchanges. The result was that the $500,000,000 was spent, the commodity speculators secured a large part of the money, and in the end the farmers had the lowest prices recorded in history.

Later another experiment was tried by plowing up cotton, by destroying wheat, and by killing pigs, and while the program of scarcity, accompanied by drought, did raise some prices, it was only an expedient, and as yet the farm problem is unsolved.

Four years ago the Agricultural Committee, in an effort to raise prices, attached to the Agricultural Adjustment Act an amendment giving the President power to reduce the gold content of the dollar, thereby making the dollar smaller and cheaper. The President used some of the power given by the Congress. He cheapened the dollar, prices have been raised, buying power has returned and we are working out of the depression.

The question now before us may be stated as follows:

Is the dollar sufficiently cheap and are prices sufficiently high to serve the best interests of our people?

In order to answer this question we must take into consideration the fixed charges or overhead expenses of the people. It is obvious that the value of the dollar must be so regulated as to adjust the price level to that point which will permit the people to secure dollars with which to pay their taxes, interest, and debts.

TAXES, INTEREST, AND DEBTS

The amount of the items making up these fixed charges is important. It is now estimated that the people are paying for government—Federal, State, county, city, and district—a sum annually in excess of $15,000,000,000.

It is likewise estimated that such units of government are raising by taxation the sum of approximately $10,000,000,000, thus showing that at the present time we are spending each year some $5,000,000,000 more for government than we are receiving in taxes.

Because we are spending more than we receive, we have unbalanced budgets in the Federal and smaller units of government throughout the United States.

Today the Associated Press states that "the public debt will pass the $37,000,000,000 mark this week." Statisticians generally agree that the massed debts, public and private, other than the Federal debt, amount to more than $200,000,000,000. Likewise it is estimated that the total massed interest item on public and private debts exceeds $8,000,000,000.

In order for the people to secure dollars with which to meet their tax, interest, and debt obligations, the dollar must be so valued as to produce a price level making it possible for the people to secure dollars with which to meet such obligations.

In 1932 the dollar value as measured by all commodities was 167 cents. From 1932 we have cheapened the dollar so that today the value as measured by commodities is 114 cents. This means that the dollar value is higher and prices are thereby lower than they were in 1929, before our taxes and debts were increased and before the depression broke upon the country. Also, the dollar value today is some 14 cents higher than it was in 1926 when we had the era of so-called "Coolidge prosperity."

With the present valued dollar, governmental budgets are not yet balanced, and it is the contention of the Senate Agricultural Committee that such budgets cannot possibly be balanced until the dollar is still further cheapened and prices still further increased.

STABILIZED DOLLARS MEAN STABILIZED PRICES

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has never favored and does not now favor inflation. The committee does favor the adjustment and regulation of the value of the dollar to that point which will permit farmers to have a price level sufficiently high to enable them to produce and sell their products for sufficient dollars to enable them to meet their tax, interest, and debt obligations.

The agricultural program of 4 years ago was to raise prices of agricultural products. The program of the committee today is to determine the proper price level for agricultural products and then to suggest legislation which will bring about such price level, and, further, to suggest legislation providing that the price fluctuation of the past shall be terminated as nearly as is humanly possible.

It is now the plan of one subcommittee to propose legislation converting the Federal Reserve Board into a monetary authority with a definite mandate to employ the most competent experts to be found and to set such experts to the task of determining the proper value for our dollar, and when such just, fair, and proper value has been determined the said monetary authority is to be given a mandate to adjust and regulate the value of such dollar to such determined value and thereafter to keep such value stabilized as nearly as is humanly possible.

Immediately after adjournment the second subcommittee proposes to hold hearings on Senate bill 2787. This is—

A bill to provide an adequate and balanced flow of the major agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

PURPOSES OF BILL

The purposes of the bill are, first, to secure parity of prices and income to the producers of the five major agricultural commodities—cotton, wheat, field corn, rice, and tobacco. Parity prices mean prices giving these commodities the same purchasing power they had in the pre-war base period, 1909–14. Under the terms of the bill, parity income means a net agricultural income which bears the same relationship to the income of the nonagricultural population as existed in the base period.

Second. Without interfering with the maintenance of parity prices, to provide for surplus reserves of these commodities for domestic use and export, in addition to normal carry-overs, in order that an ever-normal-granary supply of such commodities will be available.

Third. To conserve national soil resources and prevent the wasteful use of soil fertility for the production of soil-depleting crops for which there is no market, or for which there is no market at a price profitable to producers.

METHODS OF OPERATION

The purposes of the bill are to be accomplished by means of: (1) Commodity loans, (2) parity payments, and (3) marketing quotas.

COMMODITY LOANS AND PARITY PAYMENTS

The bill provides that commodity loans and parity payments are to be made only to "cooperators", that is, producers of the major agricultural commodities who enter into adjustment contracts with the Secretary of Agriculture.

The Secretary of Agriculture will determine and proclaim the total available supply of each major agricultural commodity at the beginning of each marketing year therefor. Cooperators will then be eligible to receive commodity loans and parity payments on their major agricultural commodities at the rates specified in the bill for such total supply level. Such rates are percentages of the parity price for the commodity. For the major agricultural commodities on a world-price basis, namely, cotton, tobacco, white wheat, and rice, loans become available only in the case of extraordinary large supplies. For wheat and field corn, loans are available at all supply levels. Although the rates of loans are graduated downward as the total supply increases above normal, the rates of the parity payments are graduated upward when such is the case. The commodity loans, plus the parity payments, should assure producers a return of substantially parity income from their commodity.

ACREAGE DIVERSION BY COOPERATORS

The bill provides that soil conserving will no longer be made to any producer with respect to the five major commodities pursuant to the provisions of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. In lieu of such soil-conservation payments, parity payments are made to cooperators who may be required to divert from the base production of any major agricultural commodity the percentage of diversion proclaimed by the Secretary as necessary in order to keep the total supply from exceeding the ever-normal-granary supply level.

STORAGE UNDER SEAL BY COOPERATORS

Cooperators may also be required, if the supply situation warrants, to store under seal on the farm stocks of the commodity not to exceed 20 percent of the amount harvested during 1 year. However, cooperators in this case are entitled to available commodity loans on such stored stocks.

MARKETING QUOTAS

Marketing quotas are applicable to noncooperators as well as cooperators. Such quotas will go into effect, however, only in cases where the total supply available at the beginning of a marketing year is greatly above normal. Thus, the marketing quota level for cotton, for instance, is a total supply 15 percent in excess of normal, or 20.9 million bales; corn, 10 percent in excess of normal, or 2,743 million bushels; wheat, 20 percent in excess of normal, or 893 million bushels; rice, 10 percent in excess of normal, or 12.7 million barrels; dark tobacco, 10 percent in excess of normal, or 371 million pounds; and cigar tobacco, 10 percent in excess of normal, or 416 pounds.

If, on the thirtieth day prior to the beginning of the marketing year for any major agricultural commodity, the Secretary has reason to believe that the total supply of any such commodity will reach or exceed the marketing-quota level for such commodity, he shall call public hearings in the principal area or areas devoted to the prodution of such commodity. If, on the basis of such hearings, the Secretary determines that the marketing quota level will be reached, he shall proclaim a national marketing quota for the current crop of such commodity, which shall be expressed both in terms of quantity for the commodity and in terms of a percentage of the national base acreage for the commodity computed on the basis of the national average yield for the commodity. Such a marketing quota must be fixed so as to afford at least a normal supply but not more than an ever-normal-granary supply of such commodity.

Before the effective date of such national marketing quota, the Secretary must conduct a referendum of the producers to be affected by such quota, and if more than one-third of the producers voting in such referendum oppose such quota it shall be suspended by proclamation of the Secretary. However, if such quota is thus suspended, commodity loans on such commodity will not be available until the beginning of the second succeeding marketing year for such commodity.

If the national marketing quota is approved, marketing quotas for individual farms shall be fixed by the Secretary through local committees of farmers for all farms on which the farmer, cooperator or noncooperator, is engaged in producing the commodity for market. Such quota will be, generally, the amount of the current crop, less the normal yield of the acreage devoted to the production of the crop which is in excess of the percentage of national soil-depleting base acreage specified in the Secretary's proclamation.

The bill would give the Secretary power to increase the national marketing quota and consequently the farm marketing quotas in the event that drought, war, or other emergency makes such action necessary.

In the event marketing quotas are imposed, the farmer who produces in excess of his quota is required to refrain from marketing such excess until the price of the commodity has risen to more than 10 percent over parity, or until he has absorbed the excess through subsequently diverting from the production of the commodity an acreage whose normal yield at least equals the excess. A farmer who fails to conform to these marketing requirements and markets in excess of quota is, under the bill, engaged in an unfair agricultural practice. Any farmer engaging in such unfair agricultural practice that affects interstate or foreign commerce, is subject to penalties at the rate of 50 percent of the parity price of the excess marketed. For tobacco, penalties at somewhat different rates are specified. Marketing includes feeding in any form to livestock which are to be sold, or the products of which are to be sold.

The foregoing is a general outline of the farm problem and the proposals, now under study, for bringing about a permanent program for the benefit of agriculture.

Mr. President, I now withdraw my reservation of the right to object to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 205, introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

MINNIE C. DE BACK

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, on the 19th of August the Senate passed Senate bill 610. Last night an identical bill, House bill 3988, was passed by the House. I desire to have the House bill considered and passed, a similar Senate measure having already passed the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 3988) to amend the act entitled "An act conferring upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, southern division, jurisdiction of the claim of Minnie C. de Back against the Alaska Railroad", approved June 24, 1935, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs has considered and reported favorably during this session upon some 80 bills. Every bill reported by the committee, save one, has passed the Senate. In order that the calendar may be cleared during the recess, I ask unanimous consent that the one remaining bill—Calendar No. 1269, being House bill 3162—be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs for further consideration. It is a bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment on any and all claims which the Uncompahgre Indians, and so forth, may have against the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LOW-COST HOUSING—CONFERENCE REPORT

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SECTION 1. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to promote the general welfare of the Nation by employing its funds and credit, as provided in this Act, to assist the several States and their political subdivisions to alleviate present and recurring unemployment and to remedy the unsafe and insanitary housing conditions and the acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, in rural or urban communities, that are injurious to the health, safety, and morals of the citizens of the Nation.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 2. When used in this Act—

"(1) The term 'low-rent housing' means decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings within the financial reach of families of low income, and developed and administered to promote serviceability, efficiency, economy, and stability, and embraces all necessary appurtenances thereto. The dwellings in low-rent housing as defined in this Act shall be available solely for families whose net income at the time of admission does not exceed five times the rental (including the value or cost to them of heat, light, water, and cooking fuel) of the dwellings to be furnished such families, except that in the case of families with three or more minor dependents, such ratio shall not exceed six to one.

"(2) The term 'families of low income' means families who are in the lowest income group and who cannot afford to pay enough to cause private enterprise in their locality or metropolitan area to build an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for their use.

"(3) The term 'slum' means any area where dwellings predominate which, by reason of dilapidation, overcrowding, faulty arrangement or design, lack of ventilation, light or sanitation facilities, or any combination of these factors, are detrimental to safety, health, or morals.

"(5) The term 'development' means any or all undertakings necessary for planning, financing (including payment of carrying charges), land acquisition, demolition, construction, or equipment, in connection with a low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project, but not beyond the point of physical completion. Construction activity in connection with a low-rent-housing project may be confined to the reconstruction, remodeling, or repair of existing buildings.

"(6) The term 'administration' means any or all undertakings necessary for management, operation, maintenance, or financing, in connection with a low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project subsequent to physical completion.

"(12) The term 'State' includes the States of the Union, the District of Columbia, and the Territories, dependencies, and possessions of the United States.

"(13) The term 'Authority' means the United States Housing Authority created by section 3 of this act.

"UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY

"SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created in the Department of the Interior and under the general supervision of the Secretary thereof a body corporate of perpetual duration to be known as the United States Housing Authority, which shall be an agency and instrumentality of the United States.

"(b) The powers of the Authority shall be vested in and exercised by an Administrator, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Administrator shall serve for a term of five years and shall be removable by the President upon notice and hearing for neglect of duty or malfeasance but for no other cause.

"(c) The Administrator shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, shall be eligible for reappointment, and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Neither the Administrator nor any officer or employee of the Authority shall participate in any matter affecting his personal interests or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

"SEC. 4. (a) The Administrator is authorized, subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint and fix the compensation of such employees as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of the Authority under this Act; except that without regard to the civil-service laws he may appoint such officers, attorneys and experts, and such employees whose compensation is in excess of $1,980 per annum, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

"(b) Appointment to positions made under the provisions of this Act the annual salary of which is in excess of $7,500 per annum shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate.

"(c) The Administrator may accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services and with the consent of the agency concerned may utilize such officers, employees, equipment, and information of any agency of the Federal, State, or local governments as he finds helpful in the performance of the duties of the Authority. In connection with the utilization of such services, the Authority may make reasonable payments for necessary traveling and other expenses.

"(d) The President may at any time in his discretion transfer to the Authority any right, interest, or title held by any department or agency of the Federal Government in any housing or slum-clearance projects (constructed or in process of construction on the date of enactment of this act), any assets, contracts, records, libraries, research materials, and other property held in connection with any such housing or slum-clearance projects or activities, any unexpended balance of funds allocated to such department or agency for the development, administration, or assistance of any housing or slum-clearance projects or activities, and any employees who have been engaged in work connected with housing or slum clearance. The Authority may continue any or all activities undertaken in connection with projects so transferred, subject to the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 5. (a) The principal office of the Authority shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may establish branch offices or agencies in any State, and may exercise any of its powers at any place within the United States. The Authority may, by one or more of its officers or employees or by such agents or agencies as it may designate, conduct hearings or negotiations at any place.

"(b) The Authority shall sue and be sued in its own name, and shall be represented in all litigated matters by the Attorney General or such attorney or attorneys as he may designate.

"(c) The Authority shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) The Authority shall be granted the free use of the mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government.

"(e) The Authority, including but not limited to its franchise, capital, reserves, surplus, loans, income, assets, and property of any kind, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. Obligations, including interest thereon, issued by public housing agencies in connection with low-rent-housing or slum-clearance projects, and the income derived by such agencies from such projects, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States.

"SEC. 6. (a) The Authority may make such expenditures, subject to audit under the general law, for the acquisition and maintenance of adequate administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for any necessary traveling expenses within the United States, its Territories, dependencies, or possessions, and for such other expenses as may from time to time be found necessary for the proper administration of this Act. Such financial transactions of the Authority as the making of loans, annual contributions, and capital grants, and the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property, and vouchers approved by the Administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all such financial transactions of the Authority shall be audited by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe.

"(b) The provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5) shall apply to all contracts of the Authority for services and to all of its purchases of supplies except when the aggregate amount involved is less than $300.

"(c) The use of funds made available for the purposes of this Act shall be subject to the provisions of section 2 of title 3 of the Treasury and Post Office Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1934 (47 Stat. 1489), and to make such provisions effective every contract or agreement of any kind pursuant to this Act shall contain a provision identical to the one prescribed in section 3 of title 3 of such Act.

"(d) No annual contribution, grant, or loan, and no contract for any annual contribution, grant, or loan, under this Act, shall be undertaken by the Authority except with the approval of the President.

"SEC. 7. (a) The Authority may publish and disseminate information pertinent to the various aspects of housing.

"(b) In January of each year the Authority shall make an annual report to Congress of its operations and expenses, including loans, contributions, and grants made or contracted for, low-rent-housing and slum-clearance projects undertaken, and the assets and liabilities of the Authority. Such report shall include operating statements of all projects under the jurisdiction of or receiving the assistance of the Authority, including summaries of the incomes of occupants, sizes of families, rentals, and other related information.

"SEC. 8. The Authority may from time to time make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"LOANS FOR LOW-RENT-HOUSING AND SLUM-CLEARANCE PROJECTS

"SEC. 9. The Authority may make loans to public-housing agencies to assist the development, acquisition, or administration of low-rent-housing or slum-clearance projects by such agencies. Where capital grants are made pursuant to section 11 the total amount of such loans outstanding on any one project and in which the Authority participates shall not exceed the development or acquisition cost of such project less all such capital grants, but in no event shall said loans exceed 90 per centum of such cost. In the case of annual contributions in assistance of low rentals as provided in section 10 the total of such loans outstanding on any one project and in which the Authority participates shall not exceed 90 per centum of the development or acquisition costs of such project. Such loans shall bear interest at such rate not less than the going Federal rate at the time the loan is made, plus one-half of one per centum, shall be secured in such manner, and shall be repaid within such period not exceeding sixty years, as may be deemed advisable by the Authority.

"ANNUAL CONTRIBUTIONS IN ASSISTANCE OF LOW RENTALS

"SEC. 10. (a) The Authority may make annual contributions to public housing agencies to assist in achieving and maintaining the low-rent character of their housing projects. The annual contributions for any such project shall be fixed in uniform amounts, and shall be paid in such amounts over a fixed period of years. No part of such annual contributions by the Authority shall be made available for any project unless and until the State, city, county, or other political subdivision in which such project is situated shall contribute, in the form of cash or tax remissions, general or special, or tax exemptions, at least 20 per centum of the annual contributions herein provided. The Authority shall embody the provisions for such annual contributions in a contract guaranteeing their payment over such fixed period: Provided, That no annual contributions shall be made, and the Authority shall enter into no contract guaranteeing any annual contribution in connection with the development of any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless the project includes the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwellings provided by the project; except that such elimination may, in the discretion of the Authority, be referred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to families of low income is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families.

"(b) Annual contributions shall be strictly limited to the amounts and periods necessary, in the determination of the Authority, to assure the low-rent character of the housing projects involved. Toward this end the Authority may prescribe regulations fixing the maximum contributions available under different circumstances, giving consideration to cost, location, size, rent-paying ability of prospective tenants, or other factors bearing upon the amounts and periods of assistance needed to achieve and maintain low rentals. Such regulations may provide for rates of contribution based upon development, acquisition or administration cost, number of dwelling units, number of persons housed, or other appropriate factors: Provided, That the fixed contribution payable annually under any contract shall in no case exceed a sum equal to the annual yield, at the going Federal rate of interest at the time such contract is made plus 1 per centum, upon the development or acquisition cost of the low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involved: And provided further, That all such annual contributions shall be used first to apply toward any payment of interest or principal on any loan due to the Authority from the public housing agency.

"(c) In case any contract for annual contributions is made for a period exceeding twenty years, the Authority shall reserve the right to reexamine the status of the low-rent-housing project involved at the end of ten years and every five years thereafter; and, at the time of any such reexamination, the Authority may make such modification (subject to all the provisions of this section) in the fixed and uniform amounts of subsequent annual contributions payable under such contract as is warranted by changed conditions and as is consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of the housing project involved. In no case shall any contract for annual contributions be made for a period exceeding sixty years.

"(d) All payments of annual contributions pursuant to this section shall be made out of any funds available to the Authority when such payments are due, except that its capital and its funds obtained through the issuance of obligations pursuant to section 20 (including repayments or other realizations of the principal of loans made out of such capital and funds) shall not be available for the payment of such annual contributions.

"(e) The Authority is authorized, on and after the date of the enactment of this Act, to enter into contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $5,000,000 per annum, on or after July 1, 1938, to enter into additional such contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $7,500,000 per annum, and on or after July 1, 1939, to enter into additional such contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $7,500,000 per annum. Without further authorization from Congress, no new contracts for annual contributions beyond those herein authorized shall be entered into by the Authority. The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment of all annual contributions contracted for pursuant to this section, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated in each fiscal year, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amounts necessary to provide for such payments.

"CAPITAL GRANTS IN ASSISTANCE OF LOW RENTALS

"SEC. 11. (a) As an alternative method of assistance to that provided in section 10, when any public housing agency so requests and demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Authority that such alternative method is better suited to the purpose of achieving and maintaining low rentals and to the other purposes of this Act, capital grants may be made to such agency for such purposes. The capital grants thus made for any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project shall be paid in connection with its development or acquisition, and shall be strictly limited to the amounts necessary, in the determination of the Authority, to assure its low-rent character: Provided, however, That no capital grant shall be made for the development of any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless the project includes the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwelling units provided by the project; except that such elimination may, in the discretion of the Authority, be deferred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to families of low income is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families.

"(b) Pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, the Authority may make a capital grant for any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project, which shall in no case exceed 25 per centum of its development or acquisition cost.

"(c) All paymets of capital grants by the Authority pursuant to subsection (b) of this section shall be made out of any funds available to the Authority, except that its capital and its funds obtained through the issuance of obligations pursuant to section 20 (including repayments or other realizations of the principal of loans made out of such capital and funds) shall not be available for the payment of such capital grants.

"(d) The Authority is authorized, on or after the date of the enactment of this Act to make capital grants (pursuant to subsection (b) of this section) aggregating not more than $10,000,000, on or after July 1, 1938, to make additional capital grants aggregating not more than $10,000,000, and on or after July 1, 1939, to make additional capital grants aggregating not more than $10,000,000. Without further authorization from Congress, no capital grants beyond those herein authorized shall be made by the Authority.

"(e) To supplement any capital grant made by the Authority in connection with the development of any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project, the President may allocate to the Authority, from any funds available for the relief of unemployment, an additional capital grant to be expended for payment of labor used in such development: Provided, That such additional capital grant shall not exceed 15 per centum of the development cost of the low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project involved.

"(f) No capital grant pursuant to this section shall be made for any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project unless the public housing agency receiving such capital grant shall also receive, from the State, political subdivision thereof, or otherwise, a contribution for such project (in the form of cash, land, or the value, capitalized at the going Federal rate of interest, of community facilities or services for which a charge is usually made, or tax remissions or tax exemptions) in an amount not less than 20 per centum of its development or acquisition cost.

"DISPOSAL OF FEDERAL PROJECTS

"SEC. 12. (a) It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to provide for the orderly disposal of any low-rent-housing projects hereafter transferred to or acquired by the Authority through the sale or leasing of such projects as hereinafter provided; and, in order to continue the relief of Nation-wide unemployment and in order to avoid waste pending such sale or lease, to provide for the completion and temporary administration of such projects by the Authority.

"(b) As soon as practicable the Authority shall sell its Federal projects or divest itself of their management through leases.

"(c) The Authority may sell a Federal project only to a public housing agency. Any such sale shall be for a consideration, in whatever form may be satisfactory to the Authority, equal at least to the amount which the Authority determines to be the fair value of the project for housing purposes of a low-rent character (making such adjustment as the Authority deems advisable for any annual contributions which may hereafter be given hereunder in aid of the project), less such allowance for depreciation as the Authority shall fix. Such project shall then become eligible for loans pursuant to section 9, and either annual contributions pursuant to section 10 or a capital grant pursuant to section 11. Any obligation of the purchaser accepted by the Authority as part of the consideration for the sale of such project shall be deemed a loan pursuant to section 9.

"(d) The Authority may lease any Federal low-rent-housing project, in whole or in part, to a public housing agency. The lessee of any project, pursuant to this paragraph, shall assume and pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, and shall pay to the Authority such annual sums as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project. The provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 40, sec. 303 b), shall not apply to any lease pursuant to this Act.

"(e) In the administration of any Federal low-rent-housing project pending sale or lease, the Authority shall fix the rentals at the amounts necessary to pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, plus such additional amounts as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project.

"GENERAL POWERS OF THE AUTHORITY

"SEC. 13. (a) The Authority may foreclose on any property or commence any action to protect or enforce any right conferred upon it by any law, contract, or other agreement. The Authority may bid for and purchase at any foreclosure by any party or at any other sale, or otherwise acquire, and may administer, any low-rent-housing project which is previously owned or in connection with which it has made a loan, pursuant to section 9, annual contributions pursuant to section 10, or capital grants pursuant to section 11.

"(b) The acquisition by the Authority of any real property pursuant to this Act shall not deprive any State or political subdivision thereof of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over such property, or impair the civil rights under the State or local law of the inhabitants on such property; and, insofar as any such jurisdiction may have been taken away or any such rights impaired by reason of the acquisition of any property transferred to the Authority pursuant to section 4 (d), such jurisdiction and such rights are hereby fully restored.

"(c) The Authority may enter into agreements to pay annual sums in lieu of taxes to any State or political subdivision thereof with respect to any real property owned by the Authority. The amount so paid for any year upon any such property shall not exceed the taxes that would be paid to the State or subdivision, as the case may be, upon such property if it were not exempt from taxation thereby.

"(d) The Authority may procure insurance against any loss in connection with its property and other assets (including mortgages), in such amounts, and from such insurers, as it deems desirable.

"(e) The Authority may sell or exchange at public or private sale, or lease, any real property (except low-rent-housing projects, the disposition of which is governed elsewhere in this Act) or personal property, and sell or exchange any securities or obligations, upon such terms as it may fix. The Authority may borrow on the security of any real or personal property owned by it, or on the security of the revenues to be derived therefrom, and may use the proceeds of such loans for the purposes of this Act.

"SEC. 14. Subject to the specific limitations or standards in this Act governing the terms of sales, rentals, leases, loans, contracts for annual contributions, contracts for capital grants, or other agreements, the Authority may, whenever it deems it necessary or desirable in the fulfillment of the purposes of this Act, consent to the modification, with respect to rate of interest, time of payment of any installment of principal or interest, security, amount of annual contribution, or any other term, of any contract or agreement of any kind to which the Authority is a party or which has been transferred to it pursuant to this Act. Any rule of law contrary to this provision shall be deemed inapplicable.

"SEC. 15. In order to insure that the low-rent character of housing projects will be preserved, and that the other purposes of this Act will be achieved, it is hereby provided that—

"(1) When a loan is made pursuant to section 9 for a low-rent-housing project the Authority may retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the condition (which shall be embodied in the loan agreement) providing for the maintenance of the low-rent character of the housing project involved or in the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, to increase the interest payable thereafter on the balance of said loan then held by the Authority to a rate not in excess of the going Federal rate (at the time of such breach or acquisition) plus 2 per centum per annum or to declare the unpaid principal on said loan due forthwith.

"(2) When a loan is made pursuant to section 9 for a slum-clearance project the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of the leasing or acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, to increase the interest payable thereafter on the balance of said loan then held by the Authority to a rate not in excess of the going Federal rate (at the time of such leasing or acquisition) plus 2 per centum per annum or to declare the unpaid principal on said loan due forthwith.

"(3) When a contract for annual contributions is made pursuant to section 10, the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the condition (which shall be embodied in such contract) providing for the maintenance of the low-rent character of the housing project involved, to reduce or terminate the annual contributions payable under such contract. In the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, such annual contributions shall terminate.

"(4) The Authority may also insert in any contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, lease, mortgage, or any other agreement or instrument made pursuant to this Act, such other covenants, conditions, or provisions as it may deem necessary in order to insure the low-rent character of the housing project involved: Provided, That any such contract for a substantial loan may contain a condition requiring the maintenance of an open space or playground in connection with the housing project involved if deemed necessary by the Authority for the safety or health of children.

"(5) No contract for any loan, annual contribution, or capital grant made pursuant to this Act shall be entered into by the Authority with respect to any project hereafter initiated costing more than $4,000 per family-dwelling-unit or more than $1,000 per room (excluding land, demolition, and non-dwelling facilities); except that in any city the population of which exceeds 500,000 any such contract may be entered into with respect to a project hereafter initiated costing not to exceed $5,000 per family-dwelling-unit or not to exceed $1,250 per room (excluding land, demolition, and non-dwelling facilities), if in the opinion of the Authority such higher family-dwelling-unit cost or cost per room is justified by reason of higher costs of labor and materials and other construction costs. With respect to housing projects on which construction is hereafter initiated, the Authority shall make loans, grants, and annual contributions only for such low-rent-housing projects as it finds are to be undertaken in such a manner (a) that such projects will not be of elaborate or expensive design or materials, and economy will be promoted both in construction and administration, and (b) that the average construction cost of the dwelling units (excluding land, demolition, and non-dwelling facilities) in any such project is not greater than the average construction cost of dwelling units currently produced by private enterprise, in the locality or metropolitan area concerned, under the legal building requirements applicable to the proposed site, and under labor standards not lower than those prescribed in this Act.

"SEC. 16. In order to protect labor standards—

"(1) The provisions of the Act of August 30, 1935, entitled 'An Act to amend the Act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings' (49 Stat. 1011), and of the Act of August 24, 1935, entitled 'An Act requiring contracts for the construction, alteration, and repair of any public building or public work of the United States to be accompanied by a performance bond protecting the United States and by an additional bond for the protection of persons furnishing material and labor for the construction, alteration, or repair of said public buildings or public work' (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. II, title 40, secs. 270a to 270d, inclusive), shall apply to contracts in connection with the development or administration of Federal projects and the furnishing of materials and labor for such projects: Provided, That suits shall be brought in the name of the Authority and that the Authority shall itself perform the duties prescribed by section 3 (a) of the Act of August 30, 1935, and section 3 of the Act of August 24, 1935.

"(2) Any contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, or lease pursuant to this Act shall contain a provision requiring that the wages or fees prevailing in the locality, as determined or adopted (subsequent to a determination under applicable State or local law) by the Authority, shall be paid to all architects, technical engineers, draftsmen, technicians, laborers, and mechanics employed in the development or administration of the low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involved; and the Authority may require certification as to compliance with the provisions of this paragraph prior to making any payment under such contract.

"(3) The Act entitled 'An Act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes', as amended (37 Stat. 137), shall apply to contracts of the Authority for work in connection with the development and administration of Federal projects.

"(4) The benefits of the Act entitled 'An Act to provide compensation for employees of United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes' (39 Stat. 742), shall extend to officers and employees of the Authority.

"(5) The provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 40, secs. 276b and 276c), shall apply to any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this Act.

"(6) Any contractor engaged on any project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this Act shall report monthly to the Secretary of Labor, and shall cause all subcontractors to report in like manner (within five days after the close of each calendar month, on forms to be furnished by the United States Department of Labor), as to the number of persons on their respective pay rolls on the particular project, the aggregate amount of such pay rolls, the total man-hours worked, and itemized expenditures for materials. Any such contractor shall furnish to the Department of Labor the names and addresses of all subcontractors on the work at the earliest date practicable.

"FINANCIAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 17. The Authority shall have a capital stock of $1,000,000, which shall be subscribed by the United States and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any available funds. Receipt for such payment shall be issued to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Authority and shall evidence the stock ownership of the United States of America.

"SEC. 18. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $26,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, of which $1,000,000 shall be available to pay the subscription to the capital stock of the Authority. Such sum, and all receipts and assets of the Authority, shall be available for the purposes of this Act until expended.

"SEC. 19. Any funds available under any Act of Congress for allocation for housing or slum clearance may, in the discretion of the President, be allocated to the Authority for the purposes of this Act.

"SEC. 20. (a) The Authority is authorized to issue obligations, in the form of notes, bonds, or otherwise, which it may sell to obtain funds for the purposes of this Act. The Authority may issue such obligations in an amount not to exceed $100,000,000 on or after the date of enactment of this Act, an additional amount not to exceed $200,000,000 on or after July 1, 1938, and an additional amount not to exceed $200,000,000 on or after July 1, 1939. Such obligations shall be in such forms and denominations, mature within such periods not exceeding sixty years from date of issue, bear such rates of interest not exceeding 4 per centum per annum, be subject to such terms and conditions, and be issued in such manner and sold at such prices as may be prescribed by the Authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(b) Such obligations shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

"(c) Such obligations shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed upon their face by the United States as to the payment of both interest and principal, and, in the event that the Authority shall be unable to make any such payment upon demand when due, payments shall be made to the holder by the Secretary of the Treasury with money hereby authorized to be appropriated for such purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. To the extent of such payment the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holder.

"(d) Such obligations shall be lawful investments and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or agency thereof. The Secretary of the Treasury is likewise authorized to purchase any such obligations, and for such purchases he may use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act, as amended, are extended to include any such purchases. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the obligations acquired by him pursuant to this section, and all redemptions, purchases, and sales by him of such obligations shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States.

"(e) Such obligations may be marketed for the Authority at its request by the Secretary of the Treasury, utilizing all the facilities of the Treasury Department now authorized by law for the marketing of obligations of the United States.

"SEC. 2". (a) Any money of the Authority not otherwise employed may be deposited, subject to check, with the Treasurer of the United States or in any Federal Reserve bank, or may be invested in obligations of the United States or used in the purchase or retirement or redemption of any obligations issued by the Authority.

"(b) The Federal Reserve banks are authorized and directed to act as depositories, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Authority in the general exercise of its powers, and the Authority may reimburse any such bank for its services in such manner as may be agreed upon.

"(c) The Authority may be employed as a financial agent of the Government. When designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Authority shall be a depository of public money, except receipts from customs.

"(d) Not more than 10 per centum of the funds provided for in this Act, either in the form of a loan, grant, or annual contribution, shall be expended within any one State.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 22. All general penal statutes relating to the larceny, embezzlement, or conversion or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys or property of the United States shall apply to the moneys and property of the Authority and to moneys and properties of the United States entrusted to the Authority.

"SEC. 23. Any person who, with intent to defraud the Authority or to deceive any director, officer, or employee thereof or any officer or employee of the United States, makes any false entry in any book of the Authority or make any false report or statement to or for the Authority shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"SEC. 24. Any person who shall receive any compensation, rebate, or reward, or shall enter into any conspiracy, collusion, or agreement, express or implied, with intent to defraud the Authority or with intent unlawfully to defeat its purposes, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"SEC. 25. Any person who induces or influences the Authority to purchase or acquire any property or to enter into any contract and willfully fails to disclose any interest, legal or equitable, which he has in such property or in the property to which such contract relates, or any special benefit which he expects to receive as a result of such contract, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"SEC. 26. No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words 'United States Housing Authority', or any combination of these four words, as the name, or part thereof, under which he or it shall do business. Any such use shall constitute a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

"SEC. 27. Wherever the application of the provisions of this Act conflicts with the application of the provisions of Public Numbered 837, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2025), Public Numbered 845, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2035), or any other Act of the United States dealing with housing or slum clearance, or any Executive order, regulation, or other order thereunder, the provisions of this Act shall prevail.

"SEC. 28. The President is hereby authorized to make available to The Alley Dwelling Authority, from any funds appropriated or otherwise provided to carry out the purposes of this Act, such sums as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934 (Public Numbered 307, Seventy-third Congress). Such sums shall be deposited in the Conversion of Inhabited Alleys Fund and thereafter shall remain immediately available for the purposes of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act.

"SEC. 29. Nothwithstanding any other evidences of the intention of Congress, it is hereby declared to be the controlling intent of Congress that if any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this Act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 30. This Act may be cited as the 'United States Housing Act of 1937'."

And the House agree to the same.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in lieu of having the report read, if it is acceptable to the Senate, I will make a brief statement with regard to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in order that the Members of the Senate may understand the conference report, does not the Senator think we should have a quorum call?

Mr. WALSH. I really do not think there is any opposition to the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; I think not; but I think the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] ought to be here when it is considered.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that the Senator from Virginia is not going to object to the report.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I so understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, commencing at the beginning of the Senate bill, the changes made by the conferees, briefly stated, are as follows:

DECLARATION OF POLICY

The House amendment omitted the findings of housing conditions and substituted a different declaration of policy from that contained in the Senate bill. It is briefer and more concise, but in substance is the same. The conferees accepted the House declaration of policy.

DEFINITIONS

The next subdivision of the bill is that comprising definitions. Definitions are important in this bill, because the language used in the bill describes the persons and the activities with which the authorities will deal in the administration of the law. The most important definition of the bill is that of low-rent housing.

The bill as passed by the Senate provided that the occupants of the houses to be erected under the proposed law should be those whose rent at the time of occupancy is less than one-fifth of their income; in other words, persons with an income more than five times larger than the rent which they pay would be debarred from occupying any of these housing projects, the objective being, of course, to give to the low-salaried and the low-income families the preference in occupying the houses built under the provisions of this bill. The bill as it passed the House made the ratio 1 to 4, instead of 1 to 5, as in the bill as it passed the Senate. The conferees accepted the Senate amendment and fixed the ratio at 1 to 5 and in the case of families of 3 or more minor dependents 1 to 6.

Another definition in the bill is the definition of "slum clearance." The Senate conferees accepted the House definition. It was briefer than that contained in the bill passed by the Senate, and eliminated some activities which perhaps should be eliminated. The Senate defined slum clearance as meaning "the demolition and removal of buildings from any slum area, and may embrace the adaptation of such area to public purposes, including parks, parking areas, or other recreational or community facilities."

The Senate conferees eliminated the language I have just read and left the bill defining slum clearance as merely "the demolition and removal of buildings from any slum area."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Must slum clearance be on the land where it is proposed to erect the new buildings?

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

Mr. WALSH. No. The next important feature of the bill is the administrative provision, and a substantial change was made in this provision from what was contained in the bill as it left the Senate.

The Senate vested the authority in a board of three directors. The House vested the authority in one administrator and a board of advisers of nine members. The Senate conferees accepted the House provision for one administrator, thereby eliminating the three directors, and the conferees also eliminated from the House bill the provision for a board of advisers. So that the housing authority will be conducted by one administrator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to congratulate the Senate conferees for agreeing to that provision of the House bill. I was impelled to offer an amendment on the floor of the Senate to provide for one administrator. Since the administrator is to be under the Secretary of the Interior anyway, there is no occasion for a great number.

Mr. WALSH. I think it is a decided improvement in the bill. In drafting the bill the House had the advantage of the study and consideration of the bill by the Senate. They made some changes which improved the bill, in my opinion. It was due in part to the fact that they had the result of our deliberations and our construction of the bill. This is one of the features of the bill which I think is an improvement.

CIVIL-SERVICE PROVISIONS

The next subdivision is that relating to civil-service laws and the Classification Act. The conferees had a great deal of trouble over these provisions.

The House removed from the measure providing for this permanent Government institution every provision relating to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act. So far as my memory goes, it is the first time that this has been done by either branch of the Congress in the setting up of a permanent Government activity. The Senate inserted the usual provision requiring compliance with the civil-service laws and the Classification Act.

Strange to say, this difference was one of the most bitterly fought and contested features of the bill, and the result of our deliberations was that a compromise was reached which provides that all employees whose salaries or wages are in excess of $1,980 shall be exempt from the civil-service laws, and all employees of the authority drawing less than $1,980 will have to comply with the civil-service laws. But we were successful in having the conference report contain a provision that all of the employees under the authority must comply with the Classification Act.

In this connection I may say there was a difference between the House and the Senate over the question of confirmation of appointments by the President. We discovered—and I say this because I think the Senate ought to have knowledge of it—an unusual state of mind, or a new state of mind, upon the part of some of the Members in the other branch. They were strongly opposed to the power of confirmation of appointees whose salaries are in excess of $4,000 being reposed in the Senate, and resisted very strongly the provision in the bill as it passed the Senate that employees whose salaries are in excess of $4,000 should be confirmed by the Senate. A compromise was reached providing that employees whose salaries were in excess of $7,500 should be subject to Senate confirmation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. This compromise must be considered in terms of the absence of civil-service requirements in the House amendment. So strong were the Senate conferees in insisting that the civil-service laws be not abandoned that we were obliged to make a compromise, which we preferred not to make, on the question of confirmation, but we insisted that the House conferees accept at least the application of the principle of the civil-service laws to lower grade clerks, and also the application of the Classification Act.

I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to say that I very much regret that the Senate conferees agreed to any amendment providing that the authority could appoint anyone drawing a salary up to $7,500 without confirmation by the Senate. We have to confirm a little postmaster if he receives $50 a month, but they can fill up the Department with five or six or seven thousand dollar men, and the Senate has no voice whatever. Some of those who have been appointed ought not to be here at all.

Mr. WALSH. What the Senator has said was argued by the conferees. We even pointed out the fact that an ensign in the Navy cannot be promoted to a second lieutenancy without confirmation by the Senate. There is not an officer of the Army or the Navy, from the lowest to the highest, who can be promoted without being confirmed by the Senate. We argued also that a provision requiring confirmation starting with a low salary would, in the opinion of the conferees and of the Senate, have a tendency to keep salaries down, that these boards would be reluctant to send a long list of appointees with high salaries for our confirmation, and that if we fixed the point at which the Senate would have to confirm at a low figure, we would be serving the public interest.

I am absolutely in accord with the Senator, and I am speaking of this for the purpose of giving the Senate information that was an awakening to the Senate conferees as to the state of mind to which I have referred. We went so far at one point in the deliberations that some of the Senate conferees, if it had not been for our special interest in the pending bill, seriously considered whether it was not our duty to withdraw, because I for one was not disposed to be a party to recognizing, after all the years of the building up of the merit system, the complete abandonment of it, especially when my own party is in control of the Government.

I hope the Senate will appreciate that this was a matter of compromise, and I want the Senator from Texas to know that every one of the Senate conferees—the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]—felt intensely about the matter, and we stayed for hours arguing the question, and yielded only after the House yielded by agreeing that some semblance of the civil service be adhered to. The House conferees pointed out that the only debate of serious purport in the other branch, when this bill was under consideration, was over the civil-service provision, that by an overwhelming vote the House voted the civil-service provision out of the bill. That information, of course, was presented to us, and the conferees on the part of the House said that it was useless to go back to the House unless we eliminated the civil-service provision completely.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it is a little difficult for me to understand why the House should oppose the Senate retaining the power of confirmation.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator wants me to be frank, the House thinks that it is a move on the part of the Senate to control appointments, and would prevent the House Members from recommending their personal or political friends.

Mr. CONNALLY. The power of confirmation is about all that is left to give either the Senate or the House any control of appointments. The Senators from a State would cooperate with the Representatives from their own State and Congress would really benefit by the Senate maintaining its right to confirm or reject.

Mr. WALSH. I agree fully with the Senator, as we all do. It is most regrettable; but I am speaking of it because it is a state of mind I have never seen before in the years I have been in the Senate, and it is a state of mind with which we will have to reckon in the future. The House conferees were insistent. Not until we were at the point almost of being unable to agree at all were we able to reach a compromise. I am speaking of this to let my colleagues know what was an awakening to me as to a state of mind on the subject of the civil service, of classification of salaries, and of confirmation by the Senate of which I have not heretofore been aware.

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot understand the legislative state of mind of the House that would want to deny to the Senate the right of confirmation, because it inures to the benefit of the legislative branch.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think I correctly stated the situation when I said that the conference had reached the point where we had to yield, as we did yield, or have no bill. That was the definite position of the House.

I have never been what may be called an advocate in season and out of season of civil service; but I did think that in this measure, when we were dealing with a wholly humanitarian proposition, and the American taxpayers were taking care of this tremendous problem, we ought not to turn the spoils system into cooperation with other agencies.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I may say for the benefit of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that I have referred to this matter because, in my humble opinion, we are in danger of being confronted with a movement in our own party to eliminate from the public service the merit system.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the report indicate that one branch of the Government at least has put itself upon record as favoring the spoils system?

Mr. WALSH. There is no doubt about that. Even in the acceptance of this report the opposition agreed to accept only the almost flimsy civil-service provision applying to clerks and minor employees receiving less than $1,980.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that those who believe in the efficacy of the civil service in the Government would be justified in rejecting the report, and letting the matter go over until next January, when we are again to meet, when a different feeling may be entertained by the body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. When the House considered the report the only question raised at all was the civil-service question, and many Members expressed dissatisfaction at even the compromise which the House made with the Senate. So it would have meant no bill at all, as the Senator from Idaho has said, if we had insisted upon the provision we originally put in the measure, which did away with any idea of the spoils system.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I do not know but that we ought to have insisted upon it; but, having passed the bill, our obligations to the Senate were such that I did not feel that I could go that far. I certainly want the country to know, however, that I refuse to be a party to removing the civil-service system started by a great Democratic President, and which all these years has gone on steadily advancing until recently. I regret very much to see this trend in present political thought. Indeed, the Republican member of the conference committee of the House expressed satisfaction at the situation because, he said, he could conceive of no greater issue with which to go before the country than the fact that we had destroyed the merit system and were now about to substitute the spoils system.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I to understand that the amendments which were inserted by the Senate have been cast out by the conferees?

Mr. WALSH. No; not entirely. The House bill, I repeat, came before us without a scintilla of reference to the civil service or the Classification Act, which means that the Board could hire anybody at any salary; and, in addition, they demanded the elimination of the provision for confirmation by the Senate, so that we would set up a bureau without any civil service, without any requirement to comply with the provisions of the general salary law of the country, and without any provision for confirmation.

That was what was being proposed. After the struggle, which has been referred to by the Senator from Idaho and other Senators, we succeeded in getting at least the words "civil service" in the bill, by providing that employees with salaries under $1,980 would have to be appointed in compliance with the civil-service laws, and that all the employees would be under the Classification Act. In return for that we had to surrender our powers of confirmation in the case of all positions except those carrying with them salaries in excess of $7,500.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, has the Senator the exact language of the conference report?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to read it.

Mr. WALSH. I will give the report to the Senator later.

RESEARCH PROVISIONS

The next subheading is "Research and Experimentation by the Authority on Public Housing Information." The Senate bill provided for research and experimentation by the authority on public housing information. The House bill contained no such provision. The conference agreement eliminated the provision for research and experimentation, but the conferees agreed to permit the authority to publish and disseminate housing information by the authority. I think that amendment was somewhat of an improvement. At least it restricts some of the activities of the authority.

Mr. President, the next important subject in the bill is loans.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask a question for information?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Am I correct in assuming that the provision respecting the confirmation by the Senate of appointments read "in excess of $7,500"?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Does that mean that appointees to $7,500 positions do not have to be confirmed? Does the position have to carry a salary in excess of $7,500 before an appointment to it must be confirmed?

Mr. WALSH. I am informed that the provision is "in excess of $7,500."

Mr. LEWIS. Then a position must carry a salary in excess of $7,500 before the appointee to the position must be confirmed? In other words, appointment to a position paying $7,500 does not call for confirmation?

Mr. WALSH. That is true.

Mr. President, I do not want to prophesy, but I hazard the prediction that unless a change of mind takes place, all our future provisions of this kind will be eliminated from bills by the other legislative branch.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that in all legislation recently enacted in which the Senate has provided for confirmation of appointees the limitation has been $5,000, as a rule, and in some cases as low as $4,000?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is absolutely correct. We argued that point, and we were confronted with the argument that it was beneath our dignity to try to handle such trifling matters as confirming appointees receiving salaries of $4,000. But behind it all, I believe, is a growing feeling that this power in the Senate tends to make those in authority consult the Members of the Senate rather than Members of the House in the matter of appointments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator could have convinced Members of the other body of the fallacy of that theory.

Mr. WALSH. When I saw our distinguished and able leader early yesterday afternoon, we had practically completed the bill except for the provisions to which I have referred, and had to go back and spend the whole evening discussing this point. We did everything possible. In fact, I have never before been in a conference in which the pleading was so strong to save the House conferees from having to go back to the House and face its Members, who would denounce their conferees for restoring the civil-service requirement, and for permitting any confirmation of employees on the part of the Senate. Does the Senator from Idaho bear me out in that statement?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I fully support the Senator. We were advised that the House had passed upon the proposition four distinct and different times; that nothing was to be gained by sending it back to the House; that it would be rejected. We were face to face with the proposition of losing the bill. That is the truth about it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Did the Senator from Massachusetts gather that it was the feeling on the part of those opposing the provision for confirmation that they were willing to leave to the heads of bureaus authority to designate such employees as they chose for positions paying up to $7,500, with no one to supervise the appointment and no restriction being placed upon them save their own discretion in making appointments?

Mr. WALSH. That is exactly the position that they not only took but argued for, not only to the extent that the Senator has suggested, but with respect to any salary whatever. They took the position that any salary whatever can be fixed without review by the Senate or anybody else. That was the position they took, and they were most insistent upon it. We even argued to them the benefit of the power of confirmation by citing cases that have come up in this body when even the President, who sent down the appointments, did not have information which we were able to obtain after the public knew of the appointments; and how valuable it was to the public service to have a reviewing body to which those who had complaints could bring them and have an investigation made into the ability and integrity of appointees.

There are some cases now pending before some of the committees in which serious charges are being made as to the personal integrity and the capacity of the men concerned. It is decidedly in the public interest to have that known. Even the appointing power often does not know all the facts about an appointee. I recall that when I was Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts I made appointments concerning which later I received information which, had I had it earlier, would have led me not to make the appointments. In such cases I was glad to have the public protected by an executive council to reject appointments if I myself did not withdraw the appointments.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the able Senator contemplate any system that more completely makes for the destruction of democracy than to place heads of bureaus in a position where they may name their own aides at their own discretion, just practically a family of their own selection, and thus control the complete administration of the departments, without any provision for review in any form whatever by the legislative body which made the law and created the office?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois in his usual lucid and able manner has stated the objection to the proposal with which we were confronted in the House amendment to this bill.

Let me add that I am speaking to my colleagues as I have felt it my duty to do, not that it is necessary to do so in order to secure the adoption of the report; but I fear an issue in this country against my political party on the basis that it has abandoned the Classification Act and the civil service and is now before the country as a spoilsman-ship party. I know the consequences. I cannot understand how a party that proclaims its liberalism can afford to take such a stand. The first principle of liberalism is not so much with reference to economic, social, and political questions, but the first principle is honest men, able men, capable men, men of merit, to administer the law. Of what avail are economic policies that are perfected and are advanced in favor of "the forgotten man" if those who are to administer the law are not men of the highest integrity and the highest ability and capable of performing the functions required of them?

All this was argued in the conference. We pleaded with the conferees, from a political-party standpoint. I said to the conferees that I could not and would not support a conference report that would abandon the civil service and the Classification Act. It was only after extreme declarations of that kind that we were able to reach the compromise we did reach.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, can the Senator state what the origin was of the demand for abandoning the civil service altogether?

Mr. WALSH. Some of the things stated were in confidence, but I think I can say that there was dissatisfaction with appointments which have been made, there was criticism of the Civil Service Commission itself, complaint as to the result of the appointment of postmasters under the system recently inaugurated, and also that Democrats were not always being appointed to office, but that persons who were not Democrats were getting a good many jobs. It was a combination of all those things that led to the state of mind which, I infer, is in the nature of a revolt against the present system of appointments and the selective civil-service system.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The provision of this bill that civil service shall apply only to persons having a salary of $1,980 or less is something new. It was not in the bill as passed by the House; it was not in the bill as agreed to by the Senate, as I understand. That apparently was a compromise——

Mr. WALSH. Yes; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Reached by reason of the conflict between the provision which called for confirmation of officials having a salary of from $5,000 to $7,500, or whatever it was, and the provision as to civil service.

Mr. WALSH. The general blanket civil-service provision for all employees that the bill as passed by the Senate contained except as to lawyers and experts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator feel that, regardless of this abandonment of the sound principles of the civil service, the abandonment of the principle of establishing a career system, that the housing bill should nevertheless be passed and this authority be set up?

Mr. WALSH. I reached the conclusion reluctantly that, inasmuch as I was chairman of the conferees, an officer of the Senate, and the Senate had passed this bill, it was my duty, after we got the principle recognized, to sign the report. Understand, we succeeded in having the Classification Act recognized; every employee, with certain exceptions, will be under the Classification Act, however high or low. We did get, most reluctantly, recognition at least of the civil service for the minor employees.

The other alternative was to have been a party to destroying the legislation and letting it go over for another session.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator feels that, nevertheless, the proposed legislation should be enacted?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I could very easily have submitted this report without discussing this matter, and I know my colleagues here will not feel any prejudice against the report on account of it; but I felt it my duty to tell them of this situation and of a state of mind that is alarming, and one which we ought to know about. In my opinion, unless there is a change of mind, every bill we send to the other branch is going to have eliminated from it the civil-service provisions and also the right of the Senate to confirm nominations.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So long as we continue to create new agencies. Perhaps we might stop that.

Mr. WALSH. That would be one way to stop it.

LOANS, GRANTS, AND ANNUAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. President, the next provision of this bill relates to loans, annual contributions, and capital grants. The bill as passed by the Senate provided for loans. Understand that in this bill there are three disbursements of Government money that can be made by the authority. The first is loans, the second is grants, and the third annual contributions or what are called "rent subsidies."

The bill as originally presented to the Senate contained provisions for loans by the authority on any housing project up to 100 percent. The so-called Tydings amendment, requiring a local contribution of 5 percent, brought that down to 95 percent. The bill as passed by the House provided for loans up to 85 percent of the cost of the acquisition and development of the project. Thus we were confronted with the House provision of 85 percent and the provision of the Senate bill of 95 percent. That was happily compromised by a provision which is in the report fixing at 90 percent the amount that may be loaned.

The same principle applies to the annual contributions. The Tydings amendment required a local contribution of 5 percent from the State, municipality, county, or whatever local authority should undertake the housing project. The bill as passed by the House required the same percentage to be made in the case of annual contributions as in the case of loans, namely, 15 percent. That, too, was compromised so that a loan upon a project to which is attached an annual contribution can be for only 90 percent. I think that is really an improvement on the bill as passed by the Senate, although many municipalities state that the matter of local contribution is a burden that they ought not to be called upon to assume.

Understand, we are talking about loans; first, a straight outright loan where there is no subsidy; second, a loan where there is a grant by the local housing authority itself; and, third, a loan to which is attached an annual rent contribution. In all these classes under the conference report the loan is limited to 90 percent of the cost of the development.

The next subject matter of considerable interest and importance is the annual rent contributions in assistance of families of low income. Let me add that, in my opinion, all these loans or practically all of them will be made in the last category; in other words, I do not expect that many loans will be made simply for the purpose of developing housing projects without any rent subsidy. I do not expect that many of these loans will be of the class requiring local grants. In my opinion, practically all the loans that will be made will have attached to them a requirement for an annual rent contribution. That seems to be self-apparent. It is important, therefore, for us to know what changes have been made by the conferees in the annual contribution provisions of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill fixed the annual rent contribution in any case at not to exceed a sum equal to the annual yield at the going Federal rate of interest—at the time such contract is made—plus 1 percent upon the development or acquisition cost of the low-rent housing project involved. That is estimated to be about 3½ percent of the cost of the project. This means that annual contributions can be 3½ percent of the cost of the project.

The Tydings amendment affected that annual rent-contribution provision, and required that 5 percent of that 3½ percent be contributed by the State, county, or political subdivision where the project is located. It is important to know that the House amendment conditioned the payment of annual contributions by the authority on annual local contributions of at least 25 percent. However, the local authorities were allowed to deduct contributions from the 25 percent for tax remission or tax exemption by the local agencies. After the 3½ percent for rent contributions is made, the Tydings amendment would require a reduction of 5 percent that the local authorities would have to pay. The House amendment would require 25 percent, but in that 25 percent, which the Tydings amendment did not include, were deductions for taxes and tax exemptions.

The conferees on the part of the Senate finally decided to fix the annual contribution at 20 percent with the allowances made by the House provision instead of 25 percent as provided in the bill as passed by the House and instead of 5 percent as in the bill passed by the Senate by reason of the Tydings amendment.

There is another important item in connection with the bill as it passed the House which I think is helpful and which the Senate conferees accepted. The bill as it passed the House provided that the 3½-percent money must be paid back by the local authorities in the payment of the interest on the loan and the amortization of the loan. That provision was not in the bill as it pasesd the Senate. The local authorities, instead of making its interest payments out of the rent collected from the tenants, must first make its payments for interest and the amortization payments from the 3½-percent subsidy. It is expected this will lead to more prudent management and better handling of the funds which will be available to meet expenses of administration and deterioration.

DISPOSAL OF EXISTING FEDERAL HOUSING PROJECTS

The bill as it passed the House provided means for the disposal of Federal housing or slum-clearance projects which have already been entered upon or constructed by the Government. The bill as it passed the Senate contained no such provision. The Senate conferees accepted the House provision. It permits the sale and disposition of existing housing projects such as those in the city of Atlanta, Ga., such as those in my State, and such as those in other parts of the country which have already been built under the W. P. A. and other Federal agencies. That provision seems to be essential and necessary in order that the Federal Government may move in the direction of getting out of the housing business.

PLAYGROUND PROVISION

Two other important items in the bill as it passed the Senate were the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE]. It will be recalled that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] offered an amendment providing that no housing project could be accepted without plans and specifications and requirement for a playground. Everyone will agree that in a large and extensive housing project playground facilities are desirable; but, as we construed the amendment, which was mandatory in terms, if some city wanted merely to remove two or three slum houses or one small section of slum houses, it could not get a subsidy without providing a playground. That, of course, would be impossible. The House conferees accepted an amendment which was proposed to that provision making it permissible, instead of mandatory, so that now the language of the bill is that when a substantial loan for a housing project is applied for the Federal authority may in its discretion provide for open space or a playground. That seems to meet in a satisfactory way the position of the Senate on that amendment.

LIMITATION ON COST

The amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] was next considered. The conference report embraces the amendment of the Senator from Virginia with a slight modification. The bill, as it passed the Senate, provided that the limitation on the cost of a dwelling unit in any project should be $4,000 per family unit or $1,000 per room, exclusive of cost of land and cost of renovating old buildings, less salvage value. The House amendment fixed the cost at $5,000 and had no limitation upon the cost per room. The House conferees desired us to accept their amendment or even a limitation of $4,000 on a family unit cost, but we were confronted with the question, What is a family unit? Would family units costing $4,000 be two rooms, or three rooms, or seven rooms? Fixing the amount at $5,000 per family unit, what number of rooms would it embrace?

After conferring at length on the subject we agreed upon a provision which the report contains, that the cost per room shall be $1,000 and per family unit $4,000, with an additional provision which meets the objection in part of those who are interested in the legislation representing the largest cities in the country. It provides that in the case of cities of over 500,000 population the family units, in the discretion of the Authority, may cost as much as $5,000, or $1,250 per room.

The bill, as it passed the House, provided with reference to this subject two limitations in addition to the cost limitation. It provided that the authority should practice economy in construction and administration, and should be limited in the construction of the houses to the average cost of units produced by private enterprise in the same locality. The language indicates that the Congress is desirous of having the housing projects simple and plain and built upon a basis of economy.

FINANCIAL PROVISIONS

The financial provisions have been changed materially. The bill, as it passed the Senate, provided for an aggregate bond issue by the authority totaling $700,000,000. The amendment of the House fixes the aggregate at $500,000,000. The Senate conferees accepted the amendment of the House limiting the aggregate to $500,000,000 in view of the fact that we have only a short period for construction during the present year and also because, after all, this undertaking is experimental. This was satisfactory to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who has shown a very great willingness to compromise and help the conferees reach an agreement in order that we might produce a bill that would inaugurate a policy of slum clearance.

LIMIT ON STATE LOANS

The bill as it passed the Senate provided that no more than 20 percent of the funds provided in the act should be expended within any one State. The bill as it passed the House provided that it should not exceed 10 percent. The Senate conferees accepted the House provision in this matter.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

One of the last sections of the bill is a new section which was contained in the bill as it passed the House, authorizing the President to allot some of the money to the District of Columbia Housing Authority.

Mr. President, in brief that is an explanation of the conference report as I understand its provisions. I think, in view of the difficult task we have had to perform, we have produced a bill which in some respects is better than the bill as it passed the House, and in other respects is better than the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ELLENDER in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. After the Senator began his explanation I was called from the Chamber and I regret very much to have to ask the Senator to give me some information which he has perhaps already stated. Suppose Birmingham, Ala., wanted to apply for a project under the bill to cost $5,000,000. How much would Birmingham be required to contribute?

Mr. WALSH. First of all, the Legislature of Alabama would have to establish what is called a local housing authority.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That has been done.

Mr. WALSH. That local housing authority would prepare plans for a large and expensive housing project, and then come before the Federal authority provided for in the bill and make application for a loan of 100 percent of the cost of the housing project. That is the first step. I am going to modify that statement in a moment. It would, however, because of an amendment which the Senate incorporated in the bill and which I proposed here in the Senate, have to come with a plan in its possession to destroy and eliminate some slums. The local housing authority would have to show the Federal authority that it was not simply in the house-building business, but that it was destroying a certain number of slums, perhaps at no cost at all to the local authority and perhaps at some cost to the local authority, and that it had, in addition, a housing project to replace the slums cleared. After all, this bill is, fundamentally, to do away with unsafe and insanitary housing, and to provide comfortable homes for those of low income.

The next step will be that the Federal authority will say, "We cannot give you 100 percent on this project. Under the Senate conferees' report you will have to put up 10 percent."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator mean 10 percent of the cost of construction?

Mr. WALSH. The local authority will have to put up 10 percent if it is a straight loan.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would be, on a $5,000,000 basis, $500,000.

Mr. WALSH. If you say, "We do not want a straight loan, we want to get the benefit of this subsidy, we want to get lower rents for these people", then the authorities say to you, "We will give you only 90 percent, but in the 20 percent of the annual subsidy that you have to put up you may include the taxes that you lose, and other legitimate assessments named that you have a right to levy, and which you would have if you did not surrender this property to the Federal Government and devote it to public uses."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Over what length of time would the taxes be considered as a reduction of the amount the city must put up?

Mr. WALSH. Only for 1 year, unless the annual contribution extends over a period as it would where there are annual rent contributions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. One year of taxes?

Mr. WALSH. It is a question of the percentage which the taxes represent of the cost of the project as a whole. The local authority would have 60 years to pay back the loan; but, as the Senator will see, the amount provided by the Federal Government depends upon which way the local authorities want to proceed to operate. If it is a straight loan and nothing else, the Federal Government will provide 90 percent of the money. That is the first way. The second way is a combination of local grants and Federal grants. The third way—which I think is the one that will be most generally used—is this: The local authority will say, in effect, "Let me have all the money you can as a loan and let me have all the subsidy you will give me so that I can make the rents to be paid by the occupants of these houses as low as possible."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Which way would require the city to put up the smallest amount of cash? I am asking about Birmingham as an illustration because, as the Senator doubtless knows, the amount of money that the cities must put up is going to be a big element in the program.

Mr. WALSH. In my opinion, the amount of cash the city of Birmingham will have to put up will be reasonably small, after allowing deduction for taxes and tax-exemption.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is not a large sum compared to the cost of a $5,000,000 project.

Mr. WALSH. Whatever proportion of the total cost the taxes may represent is a deduction. If the project is a $1,000,000 project, 10 percent of that is $100,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In the case of a $5,000,000 project, 10 percent would be $500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Ten percent of $1,000,000 is $100,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am asking about a $5,000,000 project.

Mr. WALSH. All right. Ten percent of a $5,000,000 project would be $500,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator know of any city in the South that could possibly raise $500,000 in cash for one of these projects?

Mr. WALSH. I think New Orleans could.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the Senator made any estimate of the number of cities in the United States which would probably be able to qualify under a 10-percent cash requirement?

Mr. WALSH. Personally, I think the item of taxes and tax exemption is elastic. Some of the conferees were of the opinion that it might wipe out the entire 10 percent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The taxes and what else?

Mr. WALSH. The tax exemption. Let me read the language of the deduction in the case of annual subsidies. The 20 percent may be in the form of cash, land, or the value, capitalized at the going Federal rate of interest, of community facilities or services—"services" is a pretty elastic word; "community facilities" is pretty elastic—for which a charge is usually made, or tax remission or tax exemption in an amount not less than 20 percent.

It may be cash, land, or the value, capitalized at the going Federal rate of interest, of community facilities or services for which a charge is usually made, or tax remissions or tax exemptions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Speaking of land, suppose the city does not own the land; of course, then it must be acquired.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What part of the cost of land purchased must the applicant contribute?

Mr. WALSH. Whatever the city pays for the purchase of land is to be deducted from the 10 percent that the authority would require the city to contribute so as to make the investment a joint one.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What proportion of the subsidy for the payment of rent over a 60-year period is the city required to contribute?

Mr. WALSH. Twenty percent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator sees what I am trying to find out.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I understand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And upon what I find out depends my vote in this matter. If we of the South are unable to qualify—and I take Birmingham to be a city that is a fair example—then I am against the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is making exactly the same objection to these features of the bill which the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] made. He has insisted right along that the grant ought to be 100 percent, and that there ought to be nothing from the local authorities. The Senator from Alabama is in absolute accord with the views of the Senator from New York. Unfortunately, however, the bill had to run the gantlet of the House of Representatives, the other branch of the Congress, where there was an overwhelming number of Representatives who were not from large cities, and who felt that this bill was for their benefit as well as for that of other sections of the country, and who did not know—to use their own language—how they could justify to their constituents taking money out of the Public Treasury for a few communities without the communities themselves contributing something. That was their argument. It is not my argument. That was their contention; and, indeed, if it were not for the fact that powerful, influential leadership in the administration was behind this bill, I think it would have great difficulty in the House.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one or two questions?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not quite through, if I may ask the Senator just one other question. I do not want to detain him.

Mr. WALSH. I am speaking of this matter because all these things have to be taken into consideration in connection with the compromise, as I know the Senator understands.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Let the Senator from New York explain that matter.

Mr. WAGNER. I want to make clear that this 20 percent contribution toward the subsidy is not as serious a matter to the community as it may at first seem to be. I think the Senator will agree with me that 20 percent represents approximately the tax exemption that is given in nearly every community. I do not know of a case where a low-cost-housing project has been constructed in which the community has not exempted the property from taxation; and such exemption represents about 20 percent, or a little over 20 percent, of the entire cost.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is good as far as it goes; but, of course, that removes the tax contribution from the amount the city must pay toward the cost of the project.

Mr. WAGNER. The city ought to be willing to do that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know; but then it does not get any credit on the cost of building the houses.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that it was my information, when the bill was before the Senate without this requirement of a larger contribution from the local authorities, that it was estimated that the projects would cost the Federal Government 101 percent over a period of 60 years, and that in 60 years the project would probably be entirely owned by the local authorities.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to ask one more question and then I will quit. I have frankly stated my position and what I am driving at. I am not criticizing the Senator from Massachusetts for anything that happened. I know there was a difference of opinion, and the Senator had to do the best he could; but will the Senator now state to me, assuming the case of a $5,000,000-construction project, what is the smallest amount of money that Birmingham would have to put up to bring about the construction of the project, plus the cost of acquiring the land for something like 8 or 10 percent of the total cost of the project?

Mr. WALSH. In my opinion—this is very indefinite—the additional amount would be very small.

Mr. BANKHEAD. When we are speaking of millions, a percentage of the total may be said to be very small, but it is large to some people.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the deductions the local authorities may make, I think they have power almost to wipe out the 10 percent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that is the judgment of the Senator, I am willing to vote for the bill, but I certainly do not want to vote for a bill under which no medium-sized city in the South, such as Birmingham or Montgomery or Mobile, in the average financial condition of such cities, could qualify.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the fact is fundamental to the whole discussion that this is not a housing bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is it?

Mr. WALSH. It is a slum-clearance bill. Some persons are trying to make it a housing bill, but it is not a housing bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A slum-clearance bill is a housing bill. It involves building houses at a great deal more expense than that of pulling down the slum dwellings.

Mr. WALSH. It is presupposed that in the city of Birmingham there is a slum area, and that the law of the State of Alabama gives authority to the municipality or some other agency to wipe out and destroy that slum area at no expense to the city or to anybody else. And that having done that, so as to benefit the condition of the poor people who are to live there, it is proposed that there shall be the aid and assistance of the Federal Government, with some little cooperation on the part of the municipality, some responsibility on the part of the municipality, in the building of new houses for those removed from the slums.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am trying to find out how great that responsibility is to be.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that. In my opinion—and I think it is the opinion of the Senator from New York—it will be comparatively small.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Something like $100,000, in the scheme to which I referred?

Mr. WALSH. I would venture to say that in the long run it will be not much more than the amount provided in the Tydings amendment, namely, 5 percent, without deductions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would be $250,000.

Mr. WALSH. For the amount of money the Senator has named, there could be a pretty extensive slum-clearance area wiped out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We have one in mind, at least as large as the colored one already established.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the white people will be given equal housing facilities with the colored.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not hear very much of the Senator's statement regarding the bill, and I should like to ask him a few questions.

First, under the bill as it passed the Senate the only contribution to be made by the local authority would be the 5 percent carried in the Tydings amendment, and that applied to the first cost of the property, as I understand.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. As I understand, under the conference report there must be a contribution of 10 percent on the first cost, that is, the cost of construction?

Mr. WALSH. A contribution of 10 percent.

Mr. GEORGE. By the local authority?

Mr. WALSH. It will be 10 percent from the local authorities for the loan and 20 percent of the annual rent contribution.

Mr. GEORGE. Twenty percent?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; 20 percent of the annual contribution, but with deductions, as enumerated.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the deductions. There is no requirement for matching after the initial transaction, so far as the subsidy is concerned, to enable the houses to be rented at low cost?

Mr. WALSH. There is no other obligation upon the local authority except that it must contribute something toward the annual contribution in the nature of rent, to the exceedingly poor people, who, it is assumed, cannot pay the rent these new houses would bring if owned by private individuals.

Mr. GEORGE. What I want to understand, if there is simply to be a 10-percent contribution by the local housing authority on the subsidy, how the amount of that contribution is to be arrived at, if it is to be made but once and in the beginning; but if it is to be made annually so long as the subsidy is paid, which, as the Senator has explained, may amount to approximately 3½ percent, it is estimated to amount to 3½ percent of the cost.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. If it is to be made annually, I can understand, but if it is not to be made annually, but only in the beginning, how is it to be arrived at?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator can understand what the obligations of the local authority will be in the annual contributions for rent.

Mr. GEORGE. That is to be made annually?

Mr. WALSH. It is to be made annually.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the deductions are for taxes, and things which may be taken off, taxes and services furnished by the State.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. The contribution, then, as I understand, against the subsidy which will be paid by the Federal Government, is an annual contribution of 20 percent?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that the conference report contains some provisions discussed by the Senator from Massachusetts which will be disappointing to many persons who favor a sound housing policy. In my opinion, it might be advantageous in the end if action upon the report were deferred. It is possible there will be a special session of the Congress, and if not, we will meet again in January. In the meantime, this bill, with its many provisions, some of which need clarification, will be discussed by the people in the States and municipalities, which will seek to be the beneficiaries of the measure. They will understand it as they do not now, and undoubtedly would make concrete suggestions of a helpful nature.

Moreover, if we adopt this report it will be claimed that Congress is abandoning the merit system and endorsing the spoils system.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not intend to prolong the discussion, and certainly will not attempt to explain any provisions of the bill, which has been outlined so illuminatingly by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I merely wish to review the history of this proposed legislation and to state that a further postponement would tend to kill the bill.

This measure, or its forerunners, have been pending for 3 years. For 2 years, before the Committee on Education and Labor, there have been long and searching hearings. The proposal was before the Senate last year, and after discussion was passed, but it failed to come up for consideration in the House. This year there has been debate for a whole week on the floor of the Senate. The country understands this legislation. As a matter of fact, there is a plank in our national platform promising a program of slum clearance and a decent housing.

This is a compromise bill, of course, but I think it a great step forward, and I hope enactment will not be deferred any longer.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I enjoyed the explanation given by the Senator from Massachusetts, but I am not clear on how much the local authority has to contribute annually toward the rent subsidy. Is it 20 percent?

Mr. WAGNER. Whatever annual contribution the Federal Government makes up to the 3½ percent annually upon the development cost of the project must be matched up to 20 percent by a supplementary local contribution. Let me say to the Senator that this requirement was provided by the House. I do not know of a housing project erected thus far in which the local community has not been willing and able to exempt it from taxation. This tax exemption alone represents an amount equal to more than 20 percent of the 3½-percent Federal contribution allowed under this bill. So the present requirement will work no hardship upon the localities and will enable us to get the rents even lower than if we had to depend upon the 3½-percent Federal contribution alone.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does that represent county and municipal taxation or only the municipal taxation?

Mr. WAGNER. Whatever type of tax remissions or exemptions the property could obtain would count as the non-Federal contribution.

Mr. CONNALLY. The proposed law does not undertake to say that they cannot tax it?

Mr. WAGNER. No; that is something for the localities to determine. They may decide to make their contribution through tax remissions or exemptions, or in cash, or in some other way, by services or the like.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I wish to detain the Senate long enough only to say that although there are some features of the bill, particularly those having to do with the civil service, with which I am not at all in agreement, I recognize the fact that the Senator from New York has made a very long and arduous struggle to secure this very desirable objective. We accomplish improvements only gradually, and for that reason, though recognizing some of the defects in the measure, I shall be happy to support the Senator from New York in his efforts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

RAGSDALE & KNAUSS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 6996, for the relief of Ragsdale & Knauss.

The bill provides for the payment of $799 to stenographic reporters who reported a hearing before the Federal Power Commission. The services were rendered, and the account was approved and sent to the General Accounting Office, but that Office stated it was not according to law, because bids had not been asked for. The answer of the Power Commission is that it is an emergency matter, and that it had to have this work done.

I hope the Senate will pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6996) for the relief of Ragsdale & Knauss was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MERCHANTS NATIONAL BANK & TRUST CO. AND OTHERS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I thought this morning that a bill in which I am interested had come over from the House, but it had not come over at that time. The bill to which I referred was, however, before the Senate when the discussion of some other matters came up.

I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 6682, which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. The bill involves only about $1,200. It is for the refund of money to three institutions in my State—some money that was recovered from them because of the defalcations of a postmaster. The Government having been reimbursed for this amount, the money should rightfully be paid back to those three institutions. The passage of the bill is recommended by the proper officials.

Mr. AUSTIN. Who are the claimants, Mr. President? Are they the sureties?

Mr. HARRISON. The bill is for the relief of the Merchants National Bank & Trust Co., the First National Bank & Trust Co., and the Vicksburg Infirmary, all of Vicksburg, Miss. Some postal orders were fraudulently issued by the postmaster, who was later convicted, and he had to pay the amount on his bond. The postal orders were honored by the three claimant companies. The bill merely provides for the reimbursement of money to those who rightfully should have it back. The Department states that the acceptance of the money orders cannot be attributed to negligence on the part of the concerns defrauded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6682) for the relief of the Merchants National Bank & Trust Co., the First National Bank & Trust Co., and the Vicksburg Infirmary, all of Vicksburg, Miss., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STAMP TAX ON STEAMSHIP TICKETS, UNITED STATES AND PUERTO RICO

Mr. HARRISON. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably, without amendment, House bill 1481, to amend the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, to exempt persons traveling between Puerto Rico and the continental United States from the payment of a stamp tax on steamship tickets; and I submit a report (No. 1292) thereon.

The purpose of this bill is to remove the discrimination that has existed for many years as to Puerto Rico and all persons traveling there, because of the imposition of a stamp tax on all steamship tickets purchased in the United States for a voyage to the island. Existing law exempts from such stamp tax all tickets purchased for passage to Canada, Mexico, and Cuba; and it is felt that Puerto Rico should be placed on the same basis as the other countries. Only about $50,000 is involved in the measure.

Puerto Rico is very anxious to have this legislation enacted, and I am anxious to do something for Puerto Rico. I could not do much the other day. The bill is favorably reported by the commttee, and the Treasury Department has no objection to its enactment.

I ask for immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1481) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision 5 of schedule A of title VIII of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended by section 442 (a) of the Revenue Act of May 29, 1928, be, and hereby is, amended by striking out the word "or" before the word "Cuba" and by adding the words "or Puerto Rico" after the word "Cuba".

ALDEN H. BAKER

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 4567. It is a bill for the relief of Alden H. Baker in the amount of $850.55.

In 1918 Mr. Baker was postmaster at Westfield, Ind. He received some war stamps too late to get them into the safety deposit vault, and that night the post office was robbed. The robber was apprehended, largely through the efforts of this postmaster, and convicted. The postmaster paid for the stamps that were stolen in the robbery. The bill simply provides for the reimbursement of the postmaster for the money that he was obliged to pay for the loss of the stamps, which occurred through no fault of his own.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4567) for the relief of Alden H. Baker was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF CALIFORNIA PETITIONS

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, a short time ago I filed with the Senate a so-called monster petition from my constituents of California. It was made up of petitions from the various congressional districts. I have been requested by some of the Representatives from California to ask that the petitions from their respective districts be sent to them. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to withdraw the petitions so I may send them to the Representatives from the various districts from which the petitions came.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, what was the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request was for the withdrawal of petitions sent in from California and filed with the Senate.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. McADOO. I ask unanimous consent for leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD after adjournment of Congress to contain matters which are not available at the moment, but which I wish to place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DEVELOPMENT OF RESOURCES OF ALASKA

Mr. KING. From the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, on behalf of the chairman, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], I report back favorably the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 24) requesting the President to prepare and submit to Congress a plan for the development of resources and commerce of Alaska. It merely asks the President to obtain information concerning the resources of Alaska. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 24) requesting the President to prepare and submit to Congress a plan for development of resources and commerce of Alaska was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President is requested to prepare or cause to be prepared by the present departments and agencies of the Government, and within the regular appropriations of such departments and agencies heretofore made for the fiscal year 1938, and to report to the Congress within 30 days after commencement of the second session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, a comprehensive plan for the development of the resources of the Territory of Alaska, and the expansion and development of the facilities of commerce between the United States and Alaska, and within the Territory. The plan so prepared and reported to Congress may, in the discretion of the President, embrace a statement of such works and facilities to be established in Alaska as may be desirable for national defense. Said report to contain such information as will aid the Congress in conducting investigations to determine what is to be done with the resources of Alaska.

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL'S 14 POINTS FOR WORLD PEACE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are some who may deem it inappropriate to make any reference to world peace or to policies which are promotive of world peace. I do not accept that view, but, upon the contrary, believe that even when the clouds of war overspread various nations, and international conflicts assume alarming proportions, more vigorous efforts should be made to avert war and promote the cause of peace.

Our Secretary of State, recognized as one of the great statesmen of the world, has zealously striven to bring unity and concord not only among the republics of the Western Hemisphere but among all nations. That his efforts have not been in vain I think will be conceded. Unfortunately, military operations have assumed large proportions in Asia, and Japan is landing armed forces in various parts of China and manifesting a determination to dismember China and either directly to annex Chinese territory or to set up therein puppet governments to be controlled by Japan.

We are all familiar with the so-called four-power and nine-power treaties, as well as the Briand-Kellogg Pact, by the terms of which Japan was committed to policies which, as I view the situation, are being ruthlessly disregarded by her. Under the nine-power treaty Japan is interdicted from interfering with the territorial integrity of China. That treaty imposed obligations upon Japan, as well as the other signatories to it, to respect the Chinese Government.

However, I shall not trespass upon the time of the Senate in these closing hours. I rose primarily for the purpose of calling attention to the statement issued by the Secretary of State on the 12th of July on the United States Government's position in regard to world peace. I regard the statement as one of great importance. It was approved by substantially every government in the world, and in eloquent language many of the governments avowed their purpose to support the views expressed in Secretary Hull's important statement.

I invite the attention of the Senate to the statement, and ask that it be included in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL'S "14 POINTS" FOR WORLD PEACE

[From the July 16 statement by the Secretary of State on the United States Government's position in regard to world peace]

This country constantly and consistently advocates maintenance of peace.

We advocate national and international self-restraint.

We advocate abstinence by all nations from use of force in pursuit of policy and from interference in the internal affairs of other nations.

We advocate adjustment of problems in international relations by processes of peaceful negotiation and agreement.

We advocate faithful observance of international agreements.

Upholding the principle of the sanctity of treaties, we believe in modification of provisions of treaties, when need therefor arises, by orderly processes carried out in a spirit of mutual helpfulness and accommodation.

We believe in respect by all nations for the rights of others and performance by all nations of established obligations.

We stand for revitalizing and strengthening of international law.

We advocate steps toward promotion of economic security and stability the world over.

We advocate lowering or removing of excessive barriers in international trade.

We seek effective equality of commercial opportunity and we urge upon all nations application of the principle of equality of treatment.

We believe in limitation and reduction of armament.

Realizing the necessity for maintaining armed forces adequate for national security, we are prepared to reduce or to increase our own armed forces in proportion to reductions or increases made by other countries.

We avoid entering into alliances or entangling commitments, but we believe in cooperative effort by peaceful and practicable means in support of the principles hereinbefore stated.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the American Federation of Labor, under the leadership of Samuel Gompers, did much to improve labor conditions. Mr. Gompers possessed the confidence of the members of his organization, and enjoyed the esteem of the American people. He laid the foundations of a virile and progressive organization, and upon his passing a strong and able leader in the person of William Green succeeded to the presidency of the American Federation of Labor.

Under Mr. Green's leadership this great labor organization has met, with courage and ability, the problems presented. It has preserved the ideals of Samuel Gompers, and has carried out policies which have materially contributed to the welfare not only of labor but of the entire country. In my opinion, the cause of labor is not best served by divisions and internecine strife, nor by radicalism or theories and practices inspired by communistic philosophy. Any policies that tend to divide the people and lead to class conflicts are harmful not only to labor but to all the people. In a great democracy such as is provided under our form of Government, there should be that spirit of cooperation calculated to unify the people and promote the happiness and welfare of all.

Unfortunately there are segments in labor circles that have contributed to disturbances and conflicts in labor disputes which have seriously affected the industrial and economic life of the people and tended to arouse class feeling. As I have indicated, in this Republic, where all enjoy equal rights and privileges, any movement that tends to divide the people into classes, or to create class hatreds, is inimical to the public welfare, and dangerous to our institutions.

In the groups to which I have referred there are individuals who are doing a great disservice to the cause of labor by their attempts to divide the people, and to spread the doctrines and philosophy which are taught by Communists in other parts of the world. There is no place for communism or communistic organizations in this Republic, and there certainly should be no place for Communists in labor organizations. The American Federation of Labor has repeatedly announced its opposition to all forms of extreme socialism or communism, and has proclaimed its fidelity to democratic institutions and to the Constitution of the United States.

If time permitted, I should be glad further to express my views upon these questions; but in the closing hours of the session it is impossible for me to find the time for that purpose. However, I desire to submit as part of my remarks two statements given to the public by William Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statements will be printed in the RECORD.

The statements are as follows:

OFFICIAL STATEMENT OF WILLIAM GREEN, PRESIDENT, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR

WASHINGTON, D. C.

The sit-down strike has never been approved or supported by the American Federation of Labor. Because there is involved in its application grave implications detrimental to labor's interests, it must be disavowed by the thinking men and women of labor.

First, public opinion will not support sit-down strikes. That means labor loses public support when any part of it engages in sit-down strikes. Without such support organized labor cannot win strikes or establish and maintain itself as a vital force in the economic and industrial life of the Nation. Labor cannot afford to lose the support of public opinion.

Second, temporary advantages gained through sit-down strikes will inevitably lead to permanent injury. The public generally will not long tolerate the illegal seizure of property. If persisted in, it will, through State and Federal lawmaking bodies, force the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory arbitration, the incorporation of unions, and other repressive forms of legislation which will deprive organized labor of freedom of association and liberty of action within the limitations of both moral and statutory law. Such action would be a severe blow to labor. Labor should refrain from engaging in sit-down strikes and maintain its freedom of action and association rather than experiment with it and as a result be subjected to oppressive legal regulation and compulsory arbitration. Labor therefore runs the risk of losing more than can be gained by engaging in sit-down strikes. It must be free to strike against injustice and oppression and for higher wages and better living standards. It must be permitted to picket when strikes occur. It may be greatly restricted and perhaps denied the exercise of these elemental rights if it persists in engaging in sit-down strikes.

I therefore publicly warn labor against this illegal procedure. Both personally and officially I disavow the sit-down strike as a part of the economic and organization policy of the American Federation of Labor.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, issued (July 9, 1937) the following statement regarding the steel strikes:

"It now becomes certain that the steel strikes at Chicago, Cleveland, Johnstown, Youngstown, Canton, and other cities are lost. That means that the Committee for Industrial Organization failed to meet its first major test successfully. The strikes exacted their toll in human life and human suffering. No one can correctly measure the extent of the distress which individuals and whole communities have suffered and will suffer.

"The hosts of labor are truly sorry because of the failure of the costly experiment and its tragic outcome. They regret that thousands of workers were persuaded to sacrifice themselves as victims of ill-advised and untimely strikes. Resentment and disappointment among these workers is bound to follow.

"The query now is, What steps will now be taken by the one who formulates the policies of the Committee for Industrial Organization? He ordered those employed in the mines of the independent steel companies to strike in sympathy with the steel workers. Those workers are idle now for the alleged purpose of preventing the independent steel companies from securing coal. Now that the steel mills are in operation, will he call out on strike those mine workers who are employed at mines where the steel companies will now buy their fuel supply? He is now confronted with the problem of carrying out his threat to call miners on strike who are working under contract in mines where coal will be mined and shipped to independent steel companies or directing those employed at mines owned by said independent steel companies back to work, defeated and demoralized.

"There are two outstanding reasons why the strikes were lost.

"First. Because only a minority of the steelworkers employed at the plants involved were organized when the strikes were called. Apparently, the C. I. O. leaders are strong for minority action and minority control. They sought to win a major battle with only a corporal's guard in action. The C. I. O. was not defeated because the small number of victims who participated in the strike lacked heroism or courage, but simply because the overwhelming majority of the steelworkers refused to join the C. I. O. and participate in the strike. The essential requirement of a strong and complete organization of workers, preliminary to the calling of a strike, was completely ignored.

"Second. Public opinion was aroused because of the violent policies pursued by the C. I. O. in automobile and steel during the past year. It became openly hostile. Here, again, the power and force of public opinion is emphasized. The leaders of the C. I. O. may as well make up their minds that they cannot win strikes against which public opinion sets itself. The reaction of public opinion against the C. I. O. and C. I. O. methods is reflected in the creation of vigilante organizations in different cities, in the enactment of legislation such as the new Labor Relations Act in Michigan, and the threat of repressive legislation in other States, as well as in the Congress of the United States. As a result of the creation of hostile public opinion against the C. I. O., the American Federation of Labor must intensify its fight against the enactment of repressive legislation such as compulsory arbitration, the incorporation of trade-unions and the restriction of the rights which organized labor may exercise both in carrying out contracts and in the inauguration and prosecution of justifiable strikes. We cannot permit all organized labor to be penalized because of the stupid mistakes of the C. I. O.

"The violation of agreements, the seizure of public property, violence, riots, and uprisings can have no place in the social, economic, and industrial life of America. No union of workers who resort to the use of such methods can succeed. Failure for those who pursue such a policy is inevitable. Workers of the United States understand this to be true. They are willing to strike and fight for higher wages and improved conditions of employment, but they will do so as law-abiding people through the exercise of every moral, legal, and economic right to which they are entitled, in an orderly way and in conformity with the laws of the land.

"No hostile employer in America has done the cause of organized labor more harm than those who formulated, executed, and administered the policies of the Committee for Industrial Organization during the past 18 months."

EXCHANGE OF LAND AT NEW CUMBERLAND GENERAL DEPOT, PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 7210, being Calendar No. 1332. It provides for an exchange of land between the Federal Government and the State of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7210) to authorize an exchange of lands at the New Cumberland General Depot, Pennsylvania, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to that portion of the New Cumberland General Depot, New Cumberland, Pa., consisting of that portion of the said depot lying in the northwest corner thereof and now occupied by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania under a lease dated June 2, 1936, and to accept in exchange therefor a conveyance from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania of the fee-simple title to a tract of land adjoining New Cumberland General Depot of approximately the same area, both conveyances to be under such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF A BILL

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move the indefinite postponement of House bill 5593, being Calendar No. 1341, a similar Senate bill having passed the House yesterday. It is a bill to provide for the addition or additions of certain lands to the Fort Donelson National Military Park in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

CAROLINA MALDONADO

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 5846, being Calendar No. 1322. This is a claims bill which passed the House unanimously, and is recommended by the Senate Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5846) for the relief of Carolina Maldonado was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Carolina Maldonado, of Socorro, Tex., the sum of $3,500, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for injuries received while riding in automobile which was struck by Government truck no. 33799 operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps near Ysleta, Tex., on June 22, 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ERNESTINE HUBER NEUHELLER

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Calendar No. 1335, being Senate bill 2710.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the title of the bill be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2710) for the relief of Ernestine Huber Neuheller (nee Ernestine Huber).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2710) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration laws, relating to the issuance of immigration visas for admission to the United States for permanent residence and relating to admissions at ports of entry of aliens as immigrants for permanent residence in the United States, that provision of section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1917 (39 Stat. 875), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 136 (e)), which excludes from admission into the United States "persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude", shall not hereafter be held to apply to Ernestine Huber Neuheller who is the wife of Fritz Neuheller, an American citizen, on account of a conviction abroad for perjury, the alleged offense having been committed in a civil action where the alien, as a witness, denied for personal reasons, having met the defendant, a friend, at a certain time. The appellate court judge reviewing the case considered the alien's action incomprehensible and declared her to be an otherwise truthful, faithful, and decent person, in no way immoral or tainted with moral turpitude. If she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws an immigration visa may be issued and admission granted to Ernestine Huber Neuheller (nee Ernestine Huber) under this act upon application hereafter filed.

NOMINATIONS ON EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order which I send to the desk may be entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That paragraph 6 of Rule XXXVIII be suspended and that all nominations on the executive calendar of the Senate, or pending before any of the standing committees of the Senate, shall remain in statu quo until the convening of the next session of Congress and that the said nominations shall not be affected by the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I understand that the appointees to positions will not collect their compensation or salary until the Senate itself confirms their nominations. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if that is his understanding.

Mr. BARKLEY. The order simply leaves any nominations that have been sent to the Senate and have not been acted on in the same status they now occupy, so that they do not lapse, and the President is not required to send them back to the Senate at the next session. I do not think it will have a bearing on the appointees' ability to draw salary, because unless the President appointed them during the recess, notwithstanding that the nominations might have been sent in to the Senate, they would not be in a position to draw any salary.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that unless this order were made their terms would expire with the expiration of this session of Congress, and they would have to be reappointed at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. BARKLEY. They would have to be reappointed at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, may I inquire whether or not any nominations have been received today.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think so. I do not recall that any nominations have been received today.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there is one further inquiry that I wish to make with respect to the order. Does the order apply to nominations that have been referred to committees and on which there is no report?

Mr. BARKLEY. It does.

Mr. AUSTIN. In the case of failure to report because of determination to hold up confirmation, does the Senator from Kentucky understand that those appointees hold over until the end of the next session?

Mr. BARKLEY. No. If they are new appointments, of course, they do not hold over at all. If any nomination has been sent here which constitutes a reappointment, of course, that nomination would simply remain before the Senate without the necessity of sending it back when we meet again. If it is a new appointment, it simply remains here, and the President does not have to send it back when we meet again; but the appointee would enjoy no official status because of that fact.

Mr. AUSTIN. And by virtue of this order the status of the nomination in the committee remains the same as it is today?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONS BY WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, Senate Joint Resolution 176 provides for employment of persons by the Works Progress Administration and also for the furloughing of persons who are already on relief who might enter private employment. The Committee on Education and Labor has been threatening for several days to attempt to secure the consideration of the joint resolution and its passage, because the committee, along with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], considered that there was an emergency existing that should be met at the present time.

I should like to report that we have made progress by consultation with Mr. Hopkins, and that he is changing his policy to such an extent that persons who enter upon temporary private employment will be furloughed by the Works Progress Administration. I ask that the letter from Mr. Hopkins be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., August 21, 1937.

Hon. LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH: Confirming our telephone conversation, may I say that the Works Progress Administration has now a fixed policy of furloughing all persons who receive temporary jobs and guaranteeing them reemployment on the Works Progress Administration at the expiration of those jobs.

The quota reductions have been completed to the extent that, during the remainder of this calendar year and through the winter months, it will not be necessary to remove employable persons from the Works Progress Administration who do not have private employment unless they are removed for cause.

I should say further that it is our desire to continue the policy of replacing workers who receive temporary employment, and I do not believe that it will be necessary to initiate a new policy to forcibly remove otherwise competent workers from the W. P. A. rolls unless they have private employment.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY L. HOPKINS, Administrator.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Administrator has taken this action, we shall not press at this time the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. If I understand the policy outlined in the letter which has just been read, it will really encourage the tendency on the part of men employed by the Works Progress program to accept temporary private employment, and to that extent will aid the Works Progress Administration in a wider distribution of the funds available for employment. Men now on the rolls may be induced to accept temporary jobs with the expectation that they may return to the Works Progress projects, if necessary; otherwise they might not feel like relinquishing the Works Progress employment to go into private employment for only a short while.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is entirely correct. Persons who find themselves upon relief rolls have discovered that their employment, while at wages very much less than those received in private industry, is, nevertheless, sure and certain, and the relief rolls become more attractive, especially when the private employment is temporary. As the result of this action, persons who leave the relief rolls can leave safely, knowing that their places there will be preserved for them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to congratulate the Senator from Utah, the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], and others who have been interested in this program on their progress and what seems to me to be a satisfactory consummation of their efforts.

BENEFIT PAYMENTS TO COTTON PRODUCERS

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent, as I indicated earlier in the day I would, for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 205, providing for benefit payments to cotton producers with respect to cotton produced in 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, while I am in sympathy with the purposes sought to be attained by the joint resolution, yet, under the agreement we had with the President and the Secretary of Agriculture, I am forced to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Mississippi to object merely on the ground that the President and the Secretary of Agriculture have assured him and other Senators that what is proposed to be done by this resolution will be done by Executive order in substance?

Mr. BILBO. In substance everything except the fixing of the 10 cents a pound instead of 9 as the loan value. Substantially all the other purposes, we have assurance, will be carried out.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The conferees on the deficiency-appropriation bill reached an agreement as to the cotton-price-adjustment item. Under that agreement the amendment which was adopted by the Senate is to be presented to the other House, with the conferees on the part of the House advocating its adoption. The matter was a very controversial one. It was adopted by the conferees because of their understanding that it carried out the agreement, as I said some days ago, between the Chief Executive and Members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I think of the House Committee on Agriculture also.

The amendment in the deficiency bill does not go into the question as to the amount of the loan. It was our understanding that that question was to be determined by the President and by the Commodity Credit Corporation.

I hope the Senator from Texas will not press his joint resolution at this time. So far as I am concerned, I believe that the loans should be 10 cents per pound, but that is a matter that can be determined under the agreement arrived at between the Executive and the Members of the Senate. Certainly the amendment that has been adopted on the deficiency appropriation bill carries out that agreement, and I think the Senate should stand by it just as I have urged that the Chief Executive should stand by it.

Mr. CONNALLY. If that is the agreement, and it seems to be assured by what the Senator is saying, in view of the objection that has been made to my request for unanimous consent, I shall not press the motion to take up the joint resolution, because I realize that other matters are pending which Senators desire to have considered.

CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATION FOR POSTMASTER, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Senate has furnished me with a copy of the response of the Civil Service Commission to the resolution, unanimously adopted by the Senate yesterday, demanding to know by what authority and at whose suggestion and for what reasons the Civil Service Commission refused to let the two Virginia Senators know the result of an examination held 4 months ago at Portsmouth, Va., for the postmastership at that city.

I stated yesterday that the two Virginia Senators have practically divested themselves of all right of appointment to post offices in Virginia, having conveyed that right to the respective Representatives in Congress from Virginia, and during all this time neither Senator from Virginia has objected to any appointment that any Representative in Congress from that State has suggested and that has been sent in according to his suggestion.

The response of the Civil Service Commission is neither frank nor accurate. When I called the Chairman of that Commission up to know the result of the examination for the post office at Portsmouth he hesitated for awhile and then said it was a very embarrassing question. Well, it should not have been an embarrassing question, for the Senate is equally responsible along with the Executive for these appointments, and Senators from any State are entitled to know the facts in connection with any case.

The Chairman of the Civil Service Commission indicated clearly that some higher authority had intervened and had caused the Civil Service Commission to withhold certification for that office. He knew perfectly well why. It was because a certain person desired to be appointed and had failed in the examination, and the maneuver was to "rig" him in at all events, by either ordering a new examination or otherwise, and for that reason the Senators from Virginia were not to be given the information as to the result of the first examination.

The Civil Service Commission now reports that the action was taken at the request of the President of the United States. Of course, if the President wants to assume responsibility for that kind of procedure, it is all right. The Senate will then assume its responsibility when it comes to confirming the nominations.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL ECONOMIC COUNCIL—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate Resolution 152 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 152) submitted by Mr. BULKLEY on July 15, 1937, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures, authorized by Resolution 114, Seventy-fourth Congress, to investigate the desirability of establishing a National Economic Council, hereby is authorized, in pursuance of such investigation, to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $5,000 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized for such purpose.

CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION FURNISHED BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, day before yesterday, when the calendar was called, I objected to the consideration of the bill (S. 2940) to make confidential certain information furnished to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and for other purposes. On investigation, I find this is an important bill, affording opportunity to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, to collect information merely for statistical purposes. Therefore, I not only desire to withdraw my objection, but I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2940) to make confidential certain information furnished to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any statistical information furnished in confidence to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce by individuals, corporations, and firms shall be held to be confidential, and shall be used only for the statistical purposes for which it is supplied. The Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce shall not permit anyone other than the sworn employees of the Bureau to examine such individual reports, nor shall he permit any statistics of domestic commerce to be published in such manner as to reveal the identity of the individual, corporation, or firm furnishing such data.

SEC. 2. Any employee of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000 or imprisoned not exceeding 1 year, or both.

HENRY T. SHARP AND OTHERS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 6893) for the relief of Henry T. Sharp, Hilliard B. Atkins, and Theodore S. Meekins, and I submit a report (No. 1294) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill. It involves a matter of only $300.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6893) for the relief of Henry T. Sharp, Hilliard B. Atkins, and Theodore S. Meekins was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, notwithstanding the terms and conditions of contract of sale and purchase dated January 14, 1926, as amended, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to Henry T. Sharp, Asheville, N. C.; Hilliard B. Atkins, Waynesville, N. C.; and Theodore S. Meekins, Manteo, N. C., as their interest may appear, all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to the Beacon Island Military Reservation, N. C., without payment of the balance due the United States under the aforesaid contract, as amended.

PROMOTION OF EMPLOYEES IN THE CUSTOMS SERVICE

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] if it is his intention to have a call of the calendar today?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not contemplated that we shall have a call of the calendar. We called the calendar so recently that it is now practically clear.

Mr. WALSH. Then, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1331, being the bill (H. R. 7948) providing for the promotion of employees in the customs field service. I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I do not think the Senator was present when the bill was reported, and I believe he had some objection to it. The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is especially interested in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of information which I have received and without desiring to show any hostility to the bill, I object to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

PUNISHMENT FOR TRANSPORTATION OF STOLEN ANIMALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1375) for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, which were, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "or", and on the same page, line 7, after the word "mule", to insert a comma and "or domestic fowl".

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES A. LYONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1965) for the relief of James A. Lyons, which were, on page 1, line 5, after "Lyons", to insert "of Roanoke, Va."; on page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out "said sum representing" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for"; on page 2, lines 2 and 3, to strike out "alleged to have been"; on page 2, lines 4 and 5, to strike out "a public passenger-transportation vehicle, to wit"; on page 2, line 8, to strike out all after "Department" down to and including "there", in line 10, and insert "who was"; and on page 2, line 11, to strike out all after "officer" down to and including line 18 and insert ": Provided, That the clerk of the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia is hereby authorized and directed to satisfy, of record, the said judgment of James A. Lyons against Thomas Bailey: Provided further".

Mr. AUSTIN. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

WORK OF THE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have prepared a statement concerning the work of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, which I desire to ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD under my own name.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of T. A. M. Craven, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for a term of 7 years from July 1, 1937.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

COURT OF APPEALS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, a vacancy occurred on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia within the last few days, caused by the death of Justice Josiah A. Van Orsdel. Yesterday the President submitted the nomination of Mr. Justin Miller, at present a member of the Board of Tax Appeals, to fill the vacancy. The Judiciary Committee at its meeting this morning authorized me to report the nomination favorably and to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the legislative clerk read the nomination of Justin Miller to fill the vacancy on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BURKE. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Committee on Interstate Commerce through its chairman, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], reported the nomination of Mr. T. A. M. Craven to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be passed over.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that nominations on the Executive Calendar be stated.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Samuel H. Ordway, Jr., of New York, to be Civil Service Commissioner.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the complaints we have heard today concerning the Civil Service Commission, I desire to inquire from the appropriate committee as to the competency of the nominee whose name has just been read, Mr. Ordway. Is any member of the Civil Service Committee present?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee, but I happen to know that Mr. Ordway takes the place of Dr. White, of the University of Chicago, who resigned sometime ago.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I hope an explanation will be made of the qualifications of this appointee.

Earlier in the afternoon I referred to the attitude of Members of the other branch toward the civil-service law, part of which was due to actions attributed to the members of this Commission. I hope we shall have some evidence that the nominee is a man of personal integrity, of courage, and of intellectual capacity. In my opinion, a member of the Civil Service Commission is in many respects a national school teacher. He must have the qualifications and the training and the learning of a great teacher, and he ought to be a man of exemplary character.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, he ought also to be a man who realizes that United States Senators are largely responsible for the appointment of postmasters.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that we have had criticisms concerning the Civil Service Commission, and in view of the information we have had today from the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts in connection with the housing bill, it seems to me we ought to know something about this gentleman before we confirm him. I ask that the nomination be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be passed over.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I observe that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is in his seat. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Civil Service. I inquire of him whether he was present at any meeting of the committee which passed on the nomination of Mr. Ordway.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I regret to say that I was not. I have been very busy with the deficiency bill before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; I know the Senator has.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not been able to attend the Committee on Civil Service, so I do not know anything about this nominee. I regret that I do not.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Clarence N. Grey, of Massachusetts, to be principal administrative officer in the Social Security Board.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the nomination of Mr. Grey be confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

POSTMASTERS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on page 2 of the list of postmasters appears the name of George B. Vermilya to be postmaster at Towner, N. Dak. One of the Senators from that State, Mr. FRAZIER, has asked that the nomination be recommitted to the committee; and I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nomination of Mr. Vermilya will be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the nominations of Postmasters on the Executive Calendar be confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before the request is granted, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether, in his opinion, there is likely to be any progress at the next session with respect to the bill which has passed the House and is pending before the Civil Service Committee providing for the extension of the civil-service laws to the appointment of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure there will be. I will say that on the Senate substitute—which, if adopted, would have sent the two bills to conference—I undertook to poll the committee at this time; but I could get only 5 members to sign the report, and for that reason the matter will have to come up in its regular course.

I have no doubt that a bill will be passed at the next session of Congress, and I hope it will be satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say that the Representative from Georgia who is chairman of the House Committee on the Civil Service stated to me only this morning that he was agreeable to an amendment which he understood had been proposed to his bill in the Senate committee; namely, that the confirmation of postmasters should continue as in the past.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is, as to postmasters of the first, second, and third classes. I do not know what his position was about the matter. He had not informed me; but I am quite sure the amendment will be adopted by the Senate.

I renew my request for unanimous consent for the confirmation of the remaining nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the remaining nominations of postmasters on the Executive Calendar are confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report favorably the nominations of four additional postmasters, and ask that they may be considered at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the request is acted upon, I ask whether any of these postmasters are in Virginia.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; three of them are in Missouri, and one in Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the nominations will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William T. Scott to be postmaster at Centerville, Mo.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William O. Vinson to be postmaster at Lilbourn, Mo.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Basil V. Jones to be postmaster at Pleasant Hill, Mo.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William F. English to be postmaster at Pulaski, Tenn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the President may be notified of the confirmation of all the nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, in connection with the report from the Interstate Commerce Committee recommending the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. McNinch and Mr. Craven as members of the Federal Communications Commission, I agree with the President in his selection of them; I voted in the committee for their confirmation, and believe they should be confirmed by the Senate.

I have long felt that some corrective measures are necessary in the workings of the Commission. For example, I have just learned from Colorado that a constituent of mine practicing before this Commission, a man of splendid reputation in Colorado, had accusations made against him by one member of the Commission. Instead of following the generally accepted practice of referring such charges to the recognized bar association and its grievance committee, the Federal Communications Commission has been spending months in fooling around with these charges, with a great deal of publicity.

I understand that the chairman of the bar association wrote to the Commission and offered the services of the bar association, but the same member of the Commission who brought the accusation also refused to accept the bar association's offer.

It seems to me that the confirmation of men of wide experience and courage would result in putting a stop to such practices. In my opinion the President has made a wise choice in these men, and their addition to the Commission will be very wholesome.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, for the time being I move that the Senate return to the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed legislative session.

EXTENSION TO PUERTO RICO OF SECTION 21 OF BANKHEAD-JONES ACT

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7908) to extend the benefits of section 21 of the Bankhead-Jones Act to Puerto Rico.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7908) to extend the benefits of section 21 of the Bankhead-Jones Act to Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 4539, Calendar No. 1326, authorizing a per-capita payment of $25 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation. This is their money. The bill simply provides that they are to receive a per-capita payment out of their own money. The bill is approved by the committee and approved by the Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4539) authorizing a per-capita payment of $25 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

METLAKAHTLA INDIANS OF ALASKA

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Bill 6042, Calendar No. 1327, making further provision with respect to the funds of the Metlakahtla Indians of Alaska. This is a bill to put some of their funds in trust, to be paid out by the Secretary of the Interior. The bill is approved by the Department and by the House committee, and has been passed by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6042) making further provision with respect to the funds of the Metlakahtla Indians of Alaska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UINTAH, WHITE RIVER, AND UNCOMPAHGRE BANDS OF UTE INDIANS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, House bill 4399, Calendar No. 1328, is a bill authorizing payment for certain lands appropriated by the United States, and for other purposes. This is a bill which has passed the House. A similar bill passed the Senate last year. It was introduced, as I recall, by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] last year, and passed the Senate at that time. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4399) authorizing payment for certain lands appropriated by the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I inquire to what use these lands were appropriated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont? A number of years ago more than a million acres of land belonging to the Indians of the Ute Tribes, some of whom are in Colorado and some of whom are in Utah, were taken by Executive order and added to a forest reserve. Subsequently the Congress passed a bill appropriating a dollar and a quarter an acre for a large part of the land. The residue of it was presumed to contain coal, and, indeed, it did contain coal; and it was recommended that an appropriation be made to pay the Indians for the coal land which had been taken at the same time with the rest of the land to which I have referred. This bill is to compensate the Indians for the coal land.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 1226) to amend the act of May 3, 1935, relating to the promotion of safety on the highways of the District of Columbia.

The message returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2188) to amend section 3 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984–988), relating to Indian lands in Arizona.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a resolution (H. Res. 340), as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of two Members be appointed by the House to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the session and are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

NEW EPOCH IN THE LABOR MOVEMENT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR GUFFEY

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD, pursuant to the authority granted on request of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] a day or so ago, a speech to be delivered on August 24 over the radio by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY].

Mr. BYRD. I object. Is this the speech that was delivered last night?

Mr. MINTON. Oh, no; this is a speech on the subject of labor.

Mr. BYRD. Are there in the speech any offensive references to any Member of the Senate?

Mr. MINTON. No. I will say to the Senator that I have read the speech, and there is no reference in it to anyone to which objection might be made.

Mr. WHEELER. Is this one of the speeches of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY].

Mr. MINTON. It is to be delivered by the Senator from Pennsylvania in New York on next Tuesday night, and I hope the Senator will tune in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

VERNICE MAY M'BROOM

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 1343, being Senate bill 2090, the purpose of which is to confer citizenship on Vernice May McBroom, who was born in the United States, but through some technicality lost her residence here. The bill has been favorably reported.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, was she naturalized in some other country?

Mr. MURRAY. No, she was not. She was born and raised in Boise, Idaho, but her parents went to Canada when she was a child. She returned to this country, and is a teacher in the State of Idaho.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I should like to explain this case further in response to the question propounded by the Senator from Utah.

This lady's parents were native-born citizens of the United States, as were her grandparents also, and she was born in the United States at Boise City, Idaho. During her girlhood her parents moved to Canada. Her father became naturalized in Canada, but before she arrived at her majority they returned to the United States. After she had reached 21 years of age her father became again naturalized in the United States.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I merely desire to say, in connection with this case, that I happen to be acquainted with this lady, and she is a teacher by profession, and one of very high character

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2090) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to permit Vernice May McBroom, a native-born citizen of the United States, who involuntarily lost her citizenship during her minority by reason of the naturalization of her father as a citizen of Canada, to remain in the United States.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, said Vernice May McBroom may be naturalized as a citizen of the United States by filing a declaration of intention and taking the oath of allegiance, in the manner prescribed in the naturalization laws, before any court having jurisdiction of the naturalization of aliens.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk, which I ask to have read.

The resolution (S. Res. 189) was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses, having completed the business of the present session, are ready to adjourn unless the President has some further communication to make to them.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the only immediate matter engaging the attention of the Senate is the necessity of waiting on the House to adopt the conference report on the deficiency bill. Therefore, I move that the Senate take a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m. the Senate took a recess subject to call of the Chair.

At 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. the Senate reassembled, being called to order by the President pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 24, 35, and 52 to the bill and concurred therein.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1567) authorizing the conservation, production, exploitation, and sale of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense and to the development of commercial aeronautics, authorizing the acquisition, by purchase or otherwise, by the United States of properties for the production of helium gas, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRODUCTION AND CONTROL OF HELIUM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1567) authorizing the conservation, production, exploitation, and sale of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense and to the development of commercial aeronautics, authorizing the acquisition, by purchase or otherwise, by the United States of properties for the production of helium gas, and for other purposes, which were, on page 5, line 18, to strike out all after the word "use", down to and including "airships" in line 19, and insert "except that helium may be sold for the inflation of only such airships as operate in or between the United States and its Territories and possessions, or between the United States or its Territories and possessions and foreign countries."

On page 5, line 19, after the word "Provided", to insert "That no helium shall be sold for the inflation of any airship operating between two foreign countries notwithstanding such airship may also touch at some point in the United States: Provided further,".

On page 5, line 22, after the word "properties", to insert "and the payment of interest at a rate of not less than 3½ percent per annum on capital hereafter expended (except from the special fund established in subsection (c) of section 3 of this act) for properties, facilities, and helium-bearing gas lands, as are";

On page 5, line 23, after the word "production", to insert a colon and "Provided further, That notwithstanding the foregoing provision helium shall be sold for medicinal purposes at prices which will permit its general use therefor";

On page 7, line 3, to strike out "and approved by the President" and insert "on the joint recommendation of all of the members of the National Munitions Control Board and the Secretary of the Interior"; and

On page 7, line 20, to strike out "211" after "exportation", down to and including "sold" in line 24.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments. I make this motion with reluctance. The House has added a provision that the helium which is sold for the purpose of inflating foreign-owned airships shall be used only in those ships which are flown from a foreign country to and from America and her possessions. The practical effect of the amendment is to limit the foreign sale to particular lines which can fly their ships to the United States or to our possessions. That is contrary to the spirit of the Helium Act, which was conceived for the purpose of improving and making possible the use of lighter-than-air craft throughout the world.

The amendment means that, so far as American helium is concerned, if Great Britain, for example, wished to run a line from London to South Africa, she would be prevented from getting American helium for that purpose. It means that France could not run a line from France to Africa using American helium. It means that Holland would be deprived of using American helium for the purpose of running a line from Rotterdam to the Dutch East Indies. The amendments even go so far as to prevent the operation of foreign ships using American helium between two foreign countries, although such ships touch the United States.

Nevertheless, there is so much in the bill of good that I feel the Senate is justified in accepting the amendments of the House because they do make helium a Government monopoly; they do give to us control of that monopoly; they do make it possible for those airship companies which are ready to buy and use our helium in lines running to American ports to experiment further, and thereby develop the industry.

While it is with reluctance, therefore, that we accept the amendments, at the same time we feel that the whole world will be served as the result of the enactment of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I realize how the Senator from Utah feels with respect to the House amendments, but, in view of the fact that the industry is in its infancy, and no one can at this time tell to what extent lighter-than-air craft will be utilized later in the commercial world, it seems to me that under all the circumstances it is better to accept the amendments, with the assurance that we will have the benefit of whatever experience this may bring to us in the administration of the law, and if helium or lighter-than-air craft should make an extensive development, as probably will be the case in the future, guided by the experience we may obtain from the existence of the act on the statute books, including the amendments, we may be in a better position to legislate on the subject in the future than we are now. Only with that assurance in mind do I myself feel that we are justified in accepting the amendments adopted by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

TRIBUTE TO THE SENATE AND DECLARATION OF ITS PATRIOTISM

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will Senators allow me to impose upon them for what will not exceed 1 minute of time?

I deem it very appropriate that we direct the thought of the American public at this moment that it may not be misguided.

Earlier in the day, on the floor of the Senate there were expressions from able Senators disclosing differences of views upon very important subjects, fundamental in the extreme, both to the Constitution and to the country. These views will on tomorrow morning take some form of expression throughout the world, and there be greatly exaggerated, both as to their expression and their effect. Because these conflicts were expressions within a party, and that party the party of Government control, there will be those in different parts of the earth who will conclude that it means a division, and that it means a conflict, and perchance a destruction that will lead to confusion, and, therefore, sir, the division of devotion, if not the withering of patriotism.

From the great Far East this morning we have the news of an unfortunate catastrophe befalling the vessels of the Navy of our United States. In any part of the Orient at the present time something may arise of very serious import. In Europe it is also evident that there are nations whose attitude of mind is that here in America we are so distracted generally that such a thing as unity of purpose cannot be relied upon by us, and need not be feared by them.

Mr. President, here at this moment we proclaim to mankind that though other nations may with partisan spleen rip their institutions to fragments, or by the swing of sword and bayonet shiver the spirit of affection and slit their union of life, driving all to the flames of anarchy, it shall not be so with this our United States. Here in the Senate we may assail with contest and conflict. Still the world shall know that when the hour calls to repress every emotion but that of patriotism, it is then, as with Samuel, when called to sacred duty, that we all respond, "Here am I." Ever faithful to our devotion to America we stand, and stand we will, a united people in a united Nation, with our Constitution as our shield, and our oath registered in heaven, pledging our lives to God and country.

I thank the Senate. [Applause on the floor.]

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado if the amendment adopted by the Senate providing for the operation of the apprentice-training program was agreed to?

Mr. ADAMS. It was agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry. I ask the Senator from Colorado what was done with reference to the new building for the Government Printing Office.

Mr. ADAMS. The House receded from its amendment, and the Senate provision was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, what was done with the amendment regarding the Soldiers' Home?

Mr. ADAMS. That amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the conference report be agreed to.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION—T. A. M. CRAVEN

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination of T. A. M. Craven, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for a term of 7 years from July 1, 1937. In that connection I will state that I have talked with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], who objected to the consideration of the nomination when we were in executive session at an earlier hour, and I have also conferred with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], and the Senator from Nebraska is prepared to make a statement on the subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I indicated that I should object to the consideration of this nomination.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky withhold his request for a few moments?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have a short time to consider the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. At the request of the Senator from Utah, who desires to think over this nomination for a minute or so, I withdraw the request temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky temporarily withdraws his request.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—SAMUEL H. ORDWAY, JR.

Mr. BARKLEY. I now request that the nomination of Samuel H. Ordway, Jr., of New York, to be a Civil Service Commissioner be considered by the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky make a statement in connection with that nomination.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah objected to the consideration of this nomination earlier in the day, because he had been unable to obtain information concerning the appointee. I will state to the Senate that since that time I have been able to ascertain something about Mr. Ordway. Of course, the Senate understands that the Civil Service Commission is a bipartisan Commission. The appointment is a Republican appointment, and therefore it had to go to some Republican.

Mr. Ordway is the son of the late Samuel Ordway, of New York City, who was an outstanding advocate of civil-service reform during the administration of Grover Cleveland. He distinguished himself in that field, and was well recognized by all those throughout the country who believed in genuine civil-service reform. The appointee under consideration is the son of that illustrious father, and he has followed in his father's footsteps with respect to his devotion and his sincerity in that field. He served for 2 years as Civil Service Commissioner in the city of New York, from which position he resigned to resume the practice of law in that city. He is about 40 years of age, a man of the highest character, and stands well not only among these in his profession, but among all those in the city of New York who know him.

While I have not been able to get in touch with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], I have been able to confer with those in his office, and I am assured by them that the Senator from New York knows about this appointee, regards him very highly, and sincerely hopes that his nomination may be confirmed.

Mr. CLARK. Has the Senator conferred with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]?

Mr. BARKLEY. He has not been here today, and I have not been able to get in touch with him.

Mr. CLARK. The junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] was here today.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] was here until an hour or so ago.

No. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is not here today.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Can any Senator by an objection prevent the confirmation of a nomination?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He cannot.

Mr. PITTMAN. My understanding is that under our practice, to facilitate business, the Chair ordinarily says, "Without objection, the nomination is confirmed." Nevertheless, the nomination is required to be submitted to a vote, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when this nomination was called this afternoon I objected to its immediate consideration in order that we might learn something about the qualifications of the nominee. During past days we have had some discussion of the civil service and the merit system. A feeling has grown up that the civil service is being sacrificed and that there is too much of a disposition to return to the spoils system. If we are going to have a civil-service system I believe it should be a real civil service and merit system, and not be used or prostituted for partisan purposes.

I desired to make some inquiries as to the qualifications of the gentleman who was named. I went to the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Civil Service, and he stated he did not know the nominee. Upon inquiry from the two Senators from New York it was ascertained that neither of them knew Mr. Ordway. I felt I was justified in making objection.

Since then the Senator from Kentucky has made inquiry, as I am advised, and has been informed that Mr. Ordway is a man of ability and integrity, that he has given considerable attention to civil-service matters and to the merit system, and he, as well as the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], advised me that the man is qualified and that he would be a proper addition to the organization. I am glad, if a Republican is to be named—and one ought to be named under the law—that he is to be a man of merit, who will add prestige to the organization.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. What legislative day is this?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Legislative days do not count in executive session.

Mr. CLARK. Then, I will propound another parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. We are in executive session. When was the nomination reported?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yesterday. The question is——

Mr. CLARK. No, Mr. President. I should like to propound another parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. Was the nomination reported yesterday on a legislative day or on a calendar day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the nomination was reported yesterday by the committee.

Mr. CLARK. I make the point of order that the nomination is not now properly before the Senate under the rules of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands there are two rules with reference to legislative days. In executive session and in considering executive business, a legislative day is construed to mean a calendar day of 24 hours. In legislative session, a legislative day may continue for 200 calendar days, more or less. The report was made yesterday, and it is now subject to the will of the Senate as to whether the nomination shall be confirmed.

Mr. CLARK. I withdraw my point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION—T. A. M. CRAVEN

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the nomination of T. A. M. Craven to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of T. A. M. Craven, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wish to say, under all the circumstances which exist, that it is extremely important that this nomination be confirmed in order that there shall not be a vacancy on the Commission at a time when very important work is to be taken up by the Commission. If the nomination should fail of confirmation it would be necessary for the President to make a recess appointment, either of this man or someone else.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, which had jurisdiction, after going thoroughly into the matter and having Mr. Craven before the committee, unanimously reported the nomination yesterday, and I have every reason to believe that if he had not measured up to the requirements a unanimous report would not have been made.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I have examined very carefully into the matter of the appointment of Mr. Craven to the Communications Commission. I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will agree that it would be better to make the appointment at this time and if it should be necessary later to pass a resolution for a thorough senatorial investigation of the Commission, that will be done; but it will aid the situation very much if the nomination of Mr. Craven is confirmed at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have hesitated to interpose an objection to the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Craven for lack of full information concerning his relations to the organization heretofore. Statements have been made that he has been a large stockholder in various radio stations and radio corporations which have been the beneficiaries of some action upon the part of the Radio Commission. There has been considerable criticism of the Radio Commission. I am not attempting to defend or confirm the validity of the criticisms, but there has been a considerable demand that there be some sort of change or reorganization in connection with this very important Commission.

I shall be glad to hear the statement of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], as to the attitude of the committee and his views in regard to the testimony which was adduced at the hearing. I am very glad to learn there will be an examination and an investigation of the activities of the Commission in the past. It may be very useful to guide the Commission in the future. I shall be glad if the Senator from Montana will advise us whether the nomination should be confirmed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, when the names of Mr. Craven and Mr. McNinch were sent to the Senate for confirmation they came before the Interstate Commerce Committee. I had never known and had never seen Commander Craven. We asked him to come before the committee. We examined him with reference to past transactions. Telegrams were sent to some members of the committee and some Members of the House of Representatives making charges against him which seriously reflected upon his character and upon his right to sit as a member of the Commission.

Mr. Craven is a graduate of the Naval Academy at Annapolis. While he was in the Navy he studied radio communication. I have been told by two or three Members of the Senate that he is one of the outstanding experts and engineers in his line. He is not only recognized in the United States as such by people who understand the business but throughout the entire world.

Commander Craven represented, I believe he testified, some 100 different radio stations in the United States. He testified that at the time he was appointed engineer for the Commission he had retainers or a business which brought him approximately $49,000 gross revenue and $32,000 net revenue, and that he gave them up in order to accept a $9,000 position with the Commission. He stated that he did so because of the fact that the President of the United States had asked him to do so, and that he thought it was his duty to comply with the President's request.

At the time Mr. Craven accepted the position of chief engineer, he owned stock in three or four different radio companies. He entered into contracts with the companies to take back the stock. He assigned those contracts to his lawyer here in the city of Washington. The contracts provided that money should be paid to him over a period of something like 52 months. My recollection of the testimony is that he received from these companies, perhaps, $20,000 or $23,000 in cash for his shares, and that he deposited the money in a safe-deposit box rather than in the bank. In explanation of that fact, he stated that he was having some marital troubles, and for that reason he deposited the money in the safe-deposit box rather than in the bank, and that he did it on the advice of his attorney.

Mr. Craven likewise testified that the attorney to whom he had assigned these contracts was a very well known lawyer here in the city of Washington who constantly practiced before the Commission, and that this lawyer had consulted him and visited his office on numerous occasions in connection with matters connected with radio and with other matters.

By reason of the fact that Mr. Craven's nomination was sent to the Senate only a few days ago, the committee did not have a chance to go into it thoroughly and check up on all phases of the testimony given before the committee, or his connection with the companies. After a hearing before the committee, and after the contracts were presented and put in evidence, and after I had received from several Senators the assurance that they believed in Mr. Craven's honesty and integrity and felt that he would make a good member of the Commission, I did not object to his confirmation.

I desire to say with reference to the Radio Commission in this city that according to all the reports that have come to us, during the Republican administrations and during this administration it has been a political football, and I have so reported from time to time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is that opinion entertained also by other members of the Senator's committee?

Mr. WHEELER. I think all the Members of the Senate who know anything about the Radio Commission—members of the committee and others who know anything about it—feel that the Radio Commission has been used as a political football.

Mr. WALSH. I have heard rumors and had suspicions to that effect, but I wondered if the members of the committee had actually reached that conclusion from any evidence presented to them.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there is any doubt that that conclusion has been reached. The best indication of that fact is that the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] submitted a resolution for an investigation of the Commission and for a study of the various laws relating to radio, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. Is that resolution pending?

Mr. WHEELER. The resolution came before the Interstate Commerce Committee, and in my absence it was unanimously reported out by the committee, and is now pending before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I think it is very significant that the committee unanimously reported the resolution of investigation. They must have had some basis for undertaking a project of that kind.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there is any question about the fact that during the entire life of the Commission, a period of something like 10 or 12 years, there has been no study of the laws relating to the radio, and nothing has been done about it. I can say as chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee—and the same thing is true of other members of the committee—that tales have repeatedly been brought to us of political influence being brought to bear. As a matter of fact, one of the Commissioners himself has publicly made the charge, as I recall, that there was corruption in the Commission. I cannot believe that that is true; but that charge has been publicly made.

Mr. WALSH. What I wanted to know was whether that conviction was strengthened by other members of the committee entertaining similar views.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there is any doubt about it, because, as I say, of the fact that in my absence the resolution providing for an investigation was taken up and unanimously reported out of our committee, and is now before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I can conceive of nothing more harmful and injurious to the public interest than to have the Communications Commission politically controlled, or controlled by any sinister influences, or by any group except those actuated by the highest motives of serving the whole public.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. In view of the very great importance of the control of the radio of the United States—really a rival organization of the public press of the United States—and in view of the further fact that there is now in course of development a process of transcription which may make it possible for the radio concerns of the United States to all intents and purposes to put out of business the newspapers of the United States, does not the Senator believe the question involved is really a question of the liberty of the press, guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States?

In other words, if the Crosley Co., for instance, is permitted to operate a 500,000-watt station, and a few other superpower stations are permitted to do likewise, but the same privilege is withheld from others, and scientific developments as they have been progressing during the past few years make the radio similar to ticker tape, whereby developments of the day before will be taken into the people's homes by radio, will not control of radio either by chains or by superstations make it certain that the constitutional provision with regard to liberty of the press will be circumvented?

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator for his statement.

Mr. BURKE and Mr. SCHWELLENBACH addressed the chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, referring to the question raised by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in reference to the political aspect of the Communications Commission, I ask the Senator if it is not true that that does not apply at all to Mr. Craven; that there is no objection to him because of his being politically inclined one way or the other? Is not that correct?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think Mr. Craven is politically inclined, either as a Republican or as a Democrat. I think he is an engineer.

The only question in my mind with reference to Mr. Craven is that he has been closely associated with many of the companies, and I would not hold that against him in the slightest degree, because when he was in the field as an engineer—and he was a competent engineer—there is no question but that he was employed by a number of these companies because they thought he was competent.

I am not one of those who believe that because a man has represented some company or some radio station he is disqualified from serving upon the Commission. I think it is unfortunate for Mr. Craven himself, and unfortunate for the Commission, that the committee did not have an opportunity to go thoroughly into the nomination and sift the charges which have been made in the other House of the Congress with reference to these matters. But time did not permit us to go into those matters as thoroughly as some of the members of the committee would have liked to go.

Mr. BURKE. One of the vacancies on the Commission occurred within the last few days, I believe. I do not know how they are allocated.

In reference to the point raised by the senior Senator from Missouri concerning the freedom of the press, in which we are all interested, is it not true that nothing has been introduced before the committee that would in any way indicate that Mr. Craven would not be a valuable member of the Commission, and fully preserve the freedom of the press, and all of the other guaranties we have in mind?

Mr. WHEELER. I have not any worry on that score.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. As chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge the independent offices appropriation bill, I may say that the budget for the Federal Communications Commission is presented to us. I have never spoken to Mr. Craven outside of the committee room, but he is the best-informed man of whom I know in the engineering division of the Commission, and we have come to accept his statements without question as to matters before the Commission. The impression made upon us is that he is not only an unusually efficient man, but that he is a patriotic public servant.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. In view of the fact that the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] introduced a resolution for an investigation—and I might say that, so far as I am concerned, I think, with all due respect to all other Members of the Senate, the Senator from Maine has had a broader background, so far as radio is concerned, than anyone else in the Senate—I should like to inquire, if I may, as to the attitude of the Senator from Maine as a result of the investigation the committee made of Mr. Craven?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Maine can speak for himself, but I am sure that he will concur in the statement that Mr. Craven is a very able and a very intelligent man, and that his nomination should be confirmed.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I am very glad to express my view of the situation and my opinion of this nominee.

I think I may say, without immodesty, that for a number of years I have given, perhaps, more time to communications problems than has any other Member of the Senate. In connection with my legislative work, and with my activities outside of the legislative bodies, I have had occasion to know Commander Craven.

As the chairman of the committee said, he was graduated from Annapolis and served thereafter in the Navy for a number of years. He was ultimately approached and offered a very advantageous contract to enter into private engineering services, and he did that.

During his life as an engineer outside of the governmental service Commander Craven acquired a large clientele. I think the testimony before the Senate was that, at various times, he had represented probably 100 different radio interests. But he emphasized, and I think it is important to the Senate to understand it, that, with all of his employment, he was serving and acting only as an expert on engineering matters, and at no time had he ever appeared before the Commission or ever represented clients in any matters involving policy or public relations. Always technical engineering problems had been his work.

At the time he was asked to take a position with the Federal Communications Commission as engineer he had a private practice approaching something like $50,000 a year, netting him $32,000 a year. He had no desire whatsoever to go onto the Federal Communications Commission as its engineer, but it was reported to him that it was the President's desire that he render this service to his country.

He was told, according to his testimony, not by the President himself, but by someone purporting to speak for the President, that the President entertained the view that this man had received his education at the cost of his country, that he had served his country in time of war and served the country afterward in the Naval Establishment; that he had worn the uniform of his country, and that here was a call coming to him to render further service to his Nation. He testified, and I believe it to be true, that he gave up this lucrative private practice in order that he might meet that call upon him.

When he left the Navy and began his private practice he entered into a contract with four different radio concerns under which he was to be paid a stipulated salary, and under which he was to receive a 10-percent stock interest in each of the companies. When he was asked to go into the Federal Communications Commission as its engineer, it became necessary for him immediately to divest himself of that stock interest in order to qualify as engineer.

He testified, and there is no evidence to contradict it, that he did divest himself of the stock interest by assigning the certificates of stock and by turning back the certificates of stock to the issuing company. He did, however, enter into a contract providing for the payment for that returned stock over a period of time. There was no other way in which he could meet the situation. There was no market for the stock; no place where he could sell it, no person to whom he could sell it, except to the issuing companies, and he had, as a matter of fact, to accept their terms of payment in order to divest himself of this disqualifying stock. That he did.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me to ask a question of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator from Maine understand that the nominee still has a substantial interest, whether it is in payments over a period of years, or otherwise, in radio companies which may have cases before the Federal Communications Commission, matters of substantial interest?

Mr. WHITE. No, I do not. I understand that he has divested himself of all interest in these companies, and I believe him in this respect. He testified further that when any matter has come before the Commission for any client whom he had previously represented he had disqualified himself, and had never acted.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield further?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, that simply means we are putting a man on the Federal Communications Commission who will agree to disqualify himself whenever he thinks he has a personal interest.

Mr. WHITE. I do not know why anyone should disqualify himself unless he thinks that there is a situation which requires him to disqualify himself.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator think the Senate ought to confirm the appointment to a Commission of a man who has a known personal interest in many cases before it?

Mr. WHITE. He does not have such an interest at the present time. He has entirely divested himself of all interest.

Mr. CLARK. According to the Senator's own statement he has unpaid fees outstanding.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Let me say to the Senator from Maine that, as I remember Commander Craven testified before the committee that he had now been paid in full.

Mr. WHITE. That is what I remember and what I understood.

Mr. CLARK. Then, Mr. President, I am entirely in error in my understanding of the statement of the Senator from Maine. If the nominee has been paid in full and has no personal interest, of course, it is only the force of old associations that would influence him as a member of the Commission.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I understand that the man has entirely disassociated himself from these possible relationships.

If I may say one more word, I will then sit down. I have had occasion to know this man and to know something about the esteem in which he is held by the radio industry of this country and by the radio experts of the world. I say to the Senate that he is an outstanding engineering authority in America today. I say to the Senate that he is recognized by the communications authorities of the world as one of the outstanding authorities in the world.

Mr. President, engineering problems constitute a major part and most difficult part of the problems presented to the Radio Commission. No engineer is now a member of the Commission. In this instance the President of the United States has gone to the very highest sources of authority in radio matters. He has presented to the Senate of the United States, as I believe, an outstanding nominee, a man of unquestioned knowledge and ability in his chosen field, and, I believe, a man of unquestioned personal character.

I personally have had as much to say in criticism of the Federal Communications Commission as has any other Member of this body. I think I know of many particulars in which that criticism is justified; but I personally was delighted when the President of the United States sent this nomination to the Senate, because I believe that throughout the length and breadth of this land he could not have found a man better qualified to serve the country and to meet the problems which are presented by this amazing industry.

I hope the nomination of Commander Craven will be confirmed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator again what has become of the resolution for an investigation of the Commission?

Mr. WHITE. I should like very much to see it adopted at this time.

Mr. KING. Why has it not been adopted, in view of the criticism in which the committee apparently have indulged?

Mr. WHITE. I shall have to refer the Senator from Utah to Senators on the Democratic side of the aisle. I cannot give the information.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question. Is it the view of the Senator from Maine that if a nominee of the outstanding qualifications of Commander Craven should be placed on the Commission, it may not be necessary to hold any investigation? Is it believed that he will straighten out the matters of the Commission so that it will perform its duties as Congress and the President conceived they should be performed?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think Commander Craven will improve conditions there, but I do not think his appointment will obviate the necessity for a serious study by the Congress of the principles and the policies that should be followed by the regulatory body.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I trust that the confirmation of Commander Craven will not dampen the ardor of the Senate to pass the resolution providing for an investigation of the Federal Communications Commission and then to make the investigation. Though the situation may be taken care of for the future, yet if there were some past transactions that were improper they ought to be revealed, and the persons who indulged in them ought to be punished.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. In the light of what the Senator from Idaho has said, I will state my position. Although I feel that the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Craven to the Commission might so straighten out the affairs of the Commission that no investigation would ever be necessary, for myself I shall be very glad to support the resolution now pending and have the investigation made.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Of course when a resolution is introduced, there is always a suspicion that someone is hunting for things to criticize in the conduct of affairs by persons charged with public responsibility. I have heard many things and I know many things about this Commission of which I do not approve, but I know that during the past 25 years there has been only one study, and that a brief and casual study, of radio problems by any committee of the Congress of the United States. In 25 years' time we have seen a great industry developed in the United States. We have seen conflicts of interest. We have seen problems of the greatest complexity and difficulty presented not only to our regulatory body but also presented to the Congress of the United States.

I should not for one moment concede that the appointment of new men to this Commission would obviate the necessity for a study. As a matter of fact, it almost seems to me that as new men are put on this Commission—men not familiar with the past, perhaps not familiar with what has been taking place in the radio industry, and certainly not familiar with what has been taking place in the regulatory body—there is even greater need for the study to be made for their benefit as well as for the benefit of the sitting and older members of the Commission.

So far as I am concerned, I do not care who is named to the Commission. However brilliant I think the appointees are, however honest I think they are, I should not want their appointment to stand in the way of, not an investigation, but rather a study of the problems involved.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, let me say in concluding that if I thought the confirmation of the nomination of Commander Craven would prevent a study being made of the Radio Commission and the radio industry, I certainly should not vote for confirmation. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has said. I think the industry itself wants to see an investigation and a study made of the whole subject of radio. I think it would be exceedingly unfortunate for the radio industry itself and for the Radio Commission if a study were not made of the laws which are now upon the statute books, and generally of the industry, such as the Senator from Maine has suggested.

There is no man in the Senate of the United States and no man in the Congress who has given more study to the subject of radio than has the Senator from Maine. No man in this body is more competent to carry on a study of the subject than is the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator from Montana think, under all the circumstances as he understands them from his contact with Senators who know Commander Craven and from the evidence we heard before the committee, that the nomination of Commander Craven ought to be confirmed?

Mr. WHEELER. In justice to Commander Craven, I feel that I could not possibly say anything against him. I think it is unfortunate that his nomination came in at this last moment, and that we did not have time thoroughly to sift the charges and innuendoes that have been made against him. I feel that if we had had such an opportunity, we should have dispelled all the suggestions that have been made with reference to Commander Craven, and that his nomination would not have been held up.

So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of the confirmation of his nomination. While I am in favor of it, I believe the Interstate Commerce Committee ought to make a thorough study of the Commission at the next session of the Congress, for the benefit of the industry and for the benefit of the country.

We now have before the committee for study some of the most important questions that have ever confronted the Nation. One of those questions is whether or not concerns are to be granted licenses to operate high-powered stations similar to the Crosley station and a group of half a dozen other stations. If such grants are to be given, we shall be granting to a few people a monopoly in the matter of radio which will be one of the greatest forces ever known for controlling the economic and the political situation in this country.

No Member of the Senate at the present time has given serious consideration to that particular question, but it is a question that is being agitated before the Federal Communications Commission, and the Commission now has that question before it. It ought to be studied by the Congress of the United States.

Let me say to the Senator from Utah, likewise, that unless we stop this political manipulation of the Commission on the part of anyone, whether it be on the part of Members of Congress or on the part of the executive branch of the Government, it will bring into disrepute the radio industry and everyone connnected with it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. If Senators want to keep politics out of the Radio Commission, if they want good technical advice, if they want the Radio Commission to function in the way it should function, we might as well confirm Commander Craven now. He is the only one named to the Commission up to this particular time who understands radio. He is honest, a man of the highest integrity, a man who understands what it is all about. I believe it is the best appointment that could possibly be made. He will do something for radio.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator is right. Of course, I pretty nearly fainted a few moments ago, in fact tears came to my eyes when I was told he had given up a $32,000-net job to take a $9,000 job with the Government. [Laughter.]

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I entered upon the investigation of Commander Craven with a violent prejudice against him. After listening carefully to the testimony of Commander Craven and considering his willingness to furnish all the information that was necessary, I came to the conclusion his nomination ought to be confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT, Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume legislative session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed legislative session.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT RESOLUTION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the House Concurrent Resolution 25, which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Saturday, the 21st day of August 1937, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

DISAPPROVAL OF SENATE BILLS

The President of the United States, subsequent to the final adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate a list of

Senate bills and Senate joint resolutions disapproved by him, with his reasons for such action, as follows:

On August 26, 1937:

ERNEST S. FRAZIER

S. 46. I have withheld my approval of Senate bill No. 46 entitled "An act for the relief of Ernest S. Frazier."

The bill, in effect, would direct that the War Department and the Veterans' Administration eliminate the words "illiterate and degenerate" from the records of those two agencies insofar as they relate to Ernest S. Frazier, late of the Texas National Guard in Federal service. It is my understanding that none of the substantial rights of this former soldier are affected by this item in his record and that he has received both compensation and hospitalization from the Veterans' Administration, based on his military service.

The reasons for the proposed legislation appear to be altogether sentimental, and inasmuch as approval of this bill would constitute a precedent for the introduction and passage of others, many of which would undoubtedly impose obligations of a pecuniary nature upon the Government, I feel that such an exception should not be made in this case.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

PLACING PROVISIONAL WORLD WAR OFFICERS IN THE SAME STATUS WITH EMERGENCY WORLD WAR OFFICERS

S. 1040. I have withheld approval of S. 1040, an act placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes, for the following reasons:

This bill reads as follows:

That all persons who served as provisional officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, or who were appointed to commissioned or warrant grades or ranks in the Navy from civil life, or who entered the Navy from civil life and who were promoted to commissioned or warrant grades or ranks subsequent to April 6, 1917, and were honorably separated from such service prior to December 31, 1921, are hereby placed in the same status with all persons who served as emergency officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War and extended the same benefits and privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and regulations for said emergency officers: Provided, That application under this act for benefits and privileges must be made within 1 year after the passage of this act: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not be extended to those provisional officers retired under Regular Army retirement law.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The principal result of this bill, if approved, would be that it would, in effect, amend section 202 (b) of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, which reads as follows:

In computing the adjusted-service credit no allowance shall be made to—

* * * * * * *

(b) Any individual holding a permanent or provisional commission or permanent or acting warrant in any branch of the military or naval forces, or (while holding such commission or warrant) serving under a temporary commission in a higher grade, in each case for the period of service under such commission or warrant or in such higher grade after the accrual of the right to pay thereunder. This subdivision shall not apply to any noncommissioned officer * * *.

During the closing days of the Seventy-fourth Congress the Congress passed S. 3257, to change the last sentence of said section 202 (b), quoted above, to read as follows:

This subdivision shall not apply to any noncommissioned officer nor to any provisional, probationary, or temporary officer of the military or naval forces under the grade of major or lieutenant commander, who was honorably separated from the military or naval service prior to January 1, 1922: Provided, That applications under this act must be made within 1 year from the date of enactment.

I withheld my approval of S. 3257, and on June 26, 1936, set forth my reasons therefor in a memorandum reading in part as follows:

The legislative history of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, indicates that in the framing of the original measure in 1924 the Congress gave careful consideration to this particular subsection of the act, provisional and temporary officers being considered precisely the same as Regular Army or Navy officers from the standpoint of enjoying the privileges and emoluments of the regular commissioned service and therefore not entitled to be beneficiaries of adjusted-service credit. The view which the Congress apparently took in this connection was that persons who held commissions in the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, as was the case with provisional and temporary officers, may be said to have adopted service in the Regular Establishment as their life work; that being an officer of the Regular Establishment they would not return to a civil vocation at the conclusion of the war; and that, therefore, there was no reason for paying them adjusted compensation, the purpose of which was, in large part, to compensate civilians serving for the duration of the war for the loss they suffered during the period of military or naval service, which, in fact, was an interruption to their ordinary vocation in private life.

Of the nine groups excluded under the present law, the provisional officer group would be the first to be brought in should this bill become law. Moreover, each adjusted-service compensation proposal submitted to date for Executive approval has been vetoed both by myself and by my predecessors in office. It would, therefore, not be consistent now to extend approval to this liberalizing amendment.

My objections to S. 3257, set forth above, have equal application to the subject bill, S. 1040. Furthermore, this bill would not only provide for the same benefits to the same classes of persons as proposed by S. 3257, but would go much further and provide that persons coming within the provisions of the bill shall be placed in the same status with all persons who served as emergency officers in the military or naval forces during the World War and shall be extended the same benefits and privileges as are now or may hereafter be granted to said emergency officers.

This bill is so broadly worded that it is extremely difficult to foresee what its complete effect would be, the complications that would arise in its administration, and the new or alleged inequalities that it would establish. Provisional officers of the World War have already had benefits and privileges under their contracts of service which were not accorded to emergency officers. Therefore, if provisional officers are granted the same benefits as emergency officers, as proposed by this bill, inequality in benefits as between the two groups would still exist.

For the reasons stated above and the fact that the War and Navy Departments and the Veterans' Administration recommend that this bill be not approved, I do not feel justified in giving it my approval.

PUNISHMENT OF PERSONS TRANSPORTING STOLEN ANIMALS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

S. 1375. I have withheld approval of a bill (S. 1375) to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce for the following reasons:

The bill would make it a Federal offense knowingly to transport in interstate commerce any stolen cattle, hog, sheep, horse, mule, or domestic fowl, or the carcass or hide or any part of the carcass or hide thereof. The receipt of such stolen property would likewise be made a Federal offense. It will be observed that the scope of the measure is so broad as to bring within its terms numerous offenses of the petit-larceny type. It would seem best that cases of this class should be handled by the local authorities, as they have been heretofore, and that Federal jurisdiction should not be extended to them.

Cattle and poultry depredations on a large scale, in instances involving interstate transportation, can be prosecuted under the National Stolen Property Act if the value of the property involved is $5,000 or more. A different question might perhaps be presented if it were merely sought to reduce the minimum jurisdictional amount of $5,000 to some extent.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGES OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS IN THE STATES OF MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA

S. 2761. In view of objections raised by the War Department with respect to interference with navigation facilities I have withheld approval of the act (S. 2761) recently passed by Congress, which authorized the construction by the State of Maryland of four bridges over navigable waters within that State and in Virginia, including a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay and a bridge across the Patapsco River, both located between the city of Baltimore and the sea. Objection was based upon the fact that the construction of these two bridges would tend to prevent full use of the maritime facilities of this important port, both from the standpoint of commerce and of national defense.

The Federal Government has expended more than $16,000,000 to improve and develop the port of Baltimore for commerce. Commercial statistics reveal that the exports and imports, foreign and domestic, handled through the port of Baltimore for the calendar year 1935 totaled over 17,000,000 tons, with a value of approximately $615,000,000. This commerce is constantly increasing. It is apparent that the investment of the Federal Government and the heavy commerce must be adequately safeguarded for the unobstructed use of ships from the oceans of the whole world.

CHANGING THE NAME OF THE DISTRICT POLICE COURT TO THE CITY COURT

S. 2909. I have withheld approval of the bill (S. 2909) to change the name of the police court for the District of Columbia to the city court of the District of Columbia, for the following reasons:

The court is clothed only with criminal jurisdiction and, therefore, "police court" seems to be an appropriate designation. The proposed change of name might be taken as an indication that civil jurisdiction has been conferred on that tribunal in addition to criminal jurisdiction. Moreover, in view of the fact that there is a municipal court in the District of Columbia, which has civil jurisdiction, confusion may possibly result from the similarity of names, "city court" and "municipal court."

PERKINS-CAMPBELL CO.

S. 53. I have withheld approval of S. 53, an act for the relief of the Perkins-Campbell Co.

It appears that the Perkins-Campbell Co. was the contractor for furnishing leather satchels to the Post Office Department; that 1,000 satchels were rejected by the Post Office Department because of noncompliance with the specifications; and that subsequently, because of the urgent need of satchels in the Postal Service, the satchels were accepted at a reduction of 33⅓ percent of the contract price, following a conference by representatives of the contractor, the Post Office Department, and the Bureau of Standards.

The contention of the contractor that it was agreed at this conference that the Post Office Department would pay the balance on the satchels at the end of a year if they proved satisfactory is not supported by any evidence of record in the Post Office Department, and does not seem reasonable since it would obviously have been impracticable for the Department to keep a record of the life of the 1,000 satchels for the purpose of determining whether they equaled from a service standpoint other satchels which had been furnished in full compliance with the specifications.

The claim does not appear to me as being a just one, nor do I care to establish, by the approval of this bill, a precedent tending to encourage contractors to furnish materials to the Government falling below the standards agreed upon when the contract was entered into.

For the above reasons and because of the adverse recommendation of the Post Office Department, I do not feel justified in approving this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

WALTER CONNER

S. 57. I have withheld my approval of S. 57, Seventy-fifth Congress, "An act extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act to Walter Conner", which reads as follows:

That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to extend the benefits of the act of May 24, 1928, entitled "An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty, while in the service of the United States during the World War" (U. S. C., Supp. III, title 38, secs. 581, 582) to Walter Conner, formerly major, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, National Army, during the World War, if such Walter Conner files application with the United States Veterans' Administration for the benefits of such act within the period of 1 year after the enactment of this act. For the purposes of this act the terms of Public Law No. 506, Seventieth Congress, are hereby reenacted: Provided, That no back pay or allowances conferred by this act shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. Conner did not file claim for benefits under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, within 12 months after its passage as was definitely required by that law. There are many other emergency officers who likewise failed to file application within the prescribed time limit, but it is proposed to single this officer out for preferred consideration to the exclusion of others. No facts or circumstances are evident which, in my judgment, would warrant this discrimination.

Furthermore, other provisions of the bill are not clear as to their intent to accord to or withhold from Mr. Conner privileges not now enjoyed by a large number of emergency officers whose cases are equally meritorious, and who, notwithstanding timely filing of their claims, are not presently on the emergency officers' retired roll.

The general laws providing relief for veterans and their dependents are applicable to such large numbers of persons that it is especially desirable, not only in the interest of good administration but also in the interest of justice, that no individual should be singled out for preferred consideration over and above others of similar merit. I recognize the propriety of affording relief in exceptional and meritorious cases where the general law, because of a technicality, does not cover. However, such does not appear to be the case here.

ANNUAL APPROPRIATIONS TO STATES AND TERRITORIES FOR THE FURTHER DEVELOPMENT OF COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK

S. 1052. I have withheld my approval of Senate bill 1052, which would authorize annual appropriations totaling $2,580,000, to be paid to the States and Territories for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work. The total amount of such grants now authorized is approximately $14,000,000, and I feel that this amount should be made to suffice in view of the very great demands upon the Treasury, present and prospective, in the interest of agriculture. It would seem that the particular classes of extension work sought to be provided for by this bill might well be taken care of by amending existing law without increasing the total amount of present authorizations.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

AUTHORIZING CERTAIN PAYMENTS TO THE AMERICAN GOLD-STAR MOTHERS ET AL.

S. 1516. I have withheld my approval of S. 1516, an act to authorize certain payments to the American Gold Star Mothers of the World War and the American War Mothers, Inc., the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Inc., and the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Inc.

This bill would appropriate out of the Treasury of the United States the sum of $294,852.97 to be divided among the above-mentioned organizations for use in aiding and assisting destitute or unemployed veterans and their dependents.

While the money to be appropriated represents the unexpended balance of certain funds accumulated by military organizations during the World War, Congress has already provided that, because of the impossibility of returning this money to the sources from which it originated, it be covered into the general fund of the Treasury and has authorized an equivalent amount to be appropriated, in the event of war, for the recreation, amusement, comfort, contentment, and health of the enlisted personnel of the Military Establishment.

The reports of the committees of Congress which considered this bill, stressed the fact that a portion of the money formerly in this fund was authorized to be appropriated to the American Legion to be used in connection with the liquidation of indebtedness against Pershing Hall Memorial in Paris, thereby implying that other national organizations engaged in aiding and assisting veterans and their dependents are likewise entitled to share in this fund. The premise on which this argument is based seems to me an incorrect one. The appropriation which was made to the Secretary of the Treasury to liquidate the indebtedness connected with Pershing Hall was conditioned on the vesting of the legal title to the property in the Government of the United States for the use and benefit of all American veterans of the World War. In no sense could this former appropriation be considered as being for the benefit of any one organization of veterans. The purpose of that appropriation was entirely different from the one authorized by the pending bill.

I find myself unable to agree with the present proposal to provide, out of the general fund of the Treasury, for the donation to private agencies of funds to which they have no claim and to the expenditure of which the usual governmental safeguards would not apply.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

CONSTRUCTION OF A PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING AT WORLEY, IDAHO

S. 2862. Authorizes an appropriation of $30,000 for cooperating with the public-school board of district 57, Kootenai County, Idaho, for the construction and equipment of a public-school building at Worley, Idaho.

There are several reasons why this legislation is objectionable.

A number of similar bills have heretofore been passed by the Congress. They were approved with reluctance, because no provision was made for reimbursement to the United States of money expended in improving property the title to which was not in the United States. S. 2862 makes no provision for the reimbursement of the proposed expenditure.

The need for the construction from an Indian standpoint is not apparent. Figures given in the adverse report of the Acting Secretary of the Interior dated June 17, 1937, on H. R. 6701 showed 160 white children and 9 Indian children attending the public school at Worley. The enrollment would be increased by 40 pupils if additional classroom space were provided; of this number, perhaps 10 would be Indians.

The present Indian enrollment at this school is less than 6 percent of the total, and it would not be increased beyond 10 percent if the new construction were undertaken. The ratio of Indian and white benefits clearly demonstrates that the construction of any addition at the Worley School is not a Federal responsibility, notwithstanding the fact that there are large areas of nontaxable land within the district.

If the appropriation were made, and as a condition thereto repayment over a period of 30 years with interest at 3 percent on unrecouped balances should be required, the district would not earn an amount sufficient to meet the annual payments. Representatives of the Coeur d'Alene Indians have urged that this legislation be not enacted, inasmuch as there would be a very few Indian children receiving any benefit from this expenditure.

Approval of this legislation is withheld.

On August 30, 1937:

SAMUEL RICHARD MANN

S. 1457. I have withheld my approval of S. 1457, Seventy-fifth Congress, an act for the relief of Samuel Richard Mann, which reads as follows:

> That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel the charge entered against Samuel Richard Mann, C-905813, in such amount as remains unpaid at the date this act becomes effective, which amount will represent the balance remaining due and unpaid on account of an overpayment of emergency officers' retirement award to the said Samuel Richard Mann due to an error of the Veterans' Administration.

This act proposes to relieve Samuel Richard Mann of the balance of the indebtedness to the Government which, as of July 31, 1937, was $1,298.34. This indebtedness was originally in the amount of $2,215.64 and resulted from the erroneous payment of emergency officers' retirement pay concurrently with active-duty pay. Liquidation of the indebtedness is being effectuated by withholding part of the monthly disability compensation benefits otherwise payable.

The facts in this case are similar to those in other overpayment cases, and there is no reason evident why this particular case should receive special consideration as proposed.

HARRY W. DUBISKE

S. 937 is a bill to authorize and direct the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to receive, consider, and determine, in accordance with law, but without regard to any statute of limitations, any claim filed by Harry W. Dubiske, of Chicago, Ill., for a refund of income and profits taxes claimed to have been erroneously collected for the year 1919.

A suit for a recovery of the refund has been brought in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. One of the questions in controversy in that case is whether or not the taxpayer filed in due time a waiver which would have extended the running of the statute of limitations. The trial court has found "that plaintiff has not sustained the burden of proving the filing of the waiver." The litigation, however, has not as yet been concluded. Aside from any other considerations, it is premature to extend to the claimant any relief by legislative action while the matter is still pending in the courts.

It should be observed that the situation here presented materially differs from that involved in another case during the last Congress in which I approved the granting of legislative relief and in which it appeared that the court found that the taxpayer handed a waiver to a subordinate in the office of the Collector of Internal Revenue, and apparently, through no fault of the taxpayer, the waiver was not thereafter transmitted to the proper officials.

I have, on previous occasions, expressed my accord with the enacted policy of Congress that it is sound to include in all revenue acts, statutes of limitations, by the operation of which, after a fixed period of time, it becomes impossible for the Government to collect additional taxes or for the taxpayer to obtain a refund of an overpayment of taxes. I have pointed out that such legislation selects a small class of taxpayers for special treatment by excepting them from that policy, thus discriminating against the whole body of Federal taxpayers and establishing a precedent which would open the door to relief in all cases in which the statute operates to the prejudice of a particular taxpayer, while leaving the door closed to the Government in those cases in which the statute operates to the disadvantage of the Government.

For the foregoing reasons, I have withheld my approval of S. 937.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

SEMINOLE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA

S. 2263. Authorizes a per-capita payment of $35 to the Seminole Indians in Oklahoma from their tribal funds.

The Acting Secretary of the Interior, in his report to the Committees on Indian Affairs, listed the balances to the credit of the Seminole Indians and indicated that, exclusive of the Seminole school fund and interest thereon, only $81,099.54 would be available for making the payment, if authorized, and that the Seminole income during the fiscal year 1936 was only $2,525.70. The Seminole school fund was established by the agreement of December 16, 1897, approved July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. p. 567). This fund was—> set apart as a permanent school fund for the education of children of the members of said tribe, and shall be held by the United States at 5 percent interest, or invested to produce such amount of interest.

In the instant case the Acting Secretary of the Interior recommended that the remaining tribal funds, or at least a portion thereof, be set aside as a revolving loan fund for loans to needy Indians, such loans to be used for improving homes, acquiring farm machinery or livestock, or otherwise improving the economic status of the Indians.

There does not appear to be any emergency demanding immediate relief. The local superintendent advises that crop conditions are good; that there is no prospect of additional tribal income; that 630 individuals have incomes from oil operations; that more than $120,000 was paid out in monthly allowances during the last 6 months of the fiscal year 1937 to Indians having funds to their credit; and that special payments to, or in behalf of, those Indians for the same period were approximately $327,900.

For the reasons stated, approval of S. 2263 is withheld.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

On September 1, 1937:

L. J. POWERS

S. 886. I have found it necessary to withhold my approval of the bill S. 886, for the relief of L. J. Powers in the amount of $1,000 in settlement of his claim against the United States for the redemption of two documentary revenue stamps, one bearing serial no. 928 for $500, and one bearing serial no. 3577 for $500.

Mr. Powers' claim for redemption of the stamps presented in July 1925 was rejected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in January 1926 on the grounds that the claimant had not satisfactorily traced the history of such stamps from the time of their issuance, as required by statute and regulations, and that the claim had not been filed within the prescribed statutory period of 4 years after purchase.

The claimant alleged that he received two documentary revenue stamps, one for $500, serial no. 928, and the second, for $500, serial no. 3577, from the Couch Cotton Mills, of Atlanta, Ga., in payment for compensation due him as an officer of that company. It was further alleged that these stamps had been purchased from the collector of internal revenue at Atlanta, Ga., in October 1921. The records of the Treasury Department, however, indicate that the collector of internal revenue at Atlanta, Ga., did not sell any $500 documentary revenue stamps during a 2-year period beginning 1920 and ending in 1922. These records further show that the documentary revenue stamps covered by the claim for redemption bore serial nos. 337 and 928, although S. 886 would grant relief on account of stamps nos. 928 and 3577, as to which latter stamp no claim for redemption was ever filed by Mr. Powers.

After the Commissioner of Internal Revenue rejected the claim, Mr. Powers failed to pursue the prescribed statutory remedy for securing relief, namely, the filing of a suit within 2 years from the rejection of such claim. Consequently, in this regard, S. 886 does not differ from other bills to except certain taxpayers from the operation of the statutes of limitations, a number of which bills I have disapproved. On those occasions I expressed my accord with the enacted policy of Congress that it is sound to include in all revenue acts statutes of limitations, by the operation of which, after a fixed period of time, becomes impossible for the Government to collect additional taxes or for the taxpayer to obtain a refund of an overpayment of taxes. I pointed out in each instance that such legislation selects an individual taxpayer, or a small class of taxpayers, for special treatment by excepting them from that policy, thus discriminating against the whole body of Federal taxpayers and establishing a precedent which would open the door to relief in all cases in which the statute operates to the prejudice of a particular taxpayer, while leaving the door closed to the Government in those cases in which the statute operates to the disadvantage of the Government.

I must again express my belief that the field of special legislation should not be opened to relieve special classes of taxpayers from the consequences of their failure to protect their claims for the refund of taxes within the period fixed by law.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1937

(Legislative day of Friday, Aug. 20, 1937)

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 10 a. m.

CENSUS OF PARTIAL EMPLOYMENT, UNEMPLOYMENT, AND OCCUPATIONS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2705) to provide for the taking of a census of partial employment, unemployment, and occupations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 2705. The Clerk will report the Senate bill as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to provide information concerning the numbers, classes, and geographical distribution of persons in the United States partially employed and unemployed and their dependents and income, and concerning industries and occupations of partially employed and unemployed persons to aid in the formulation of a program for reemployment, social security, and unemployment relief for the people of the United States, the President shall cause to be taken on or before April 1, 1938, a census of partial and total unemployment, and occupations, and including such other related information as shall be deemed in the public interest in the 48 States and the District of Columbia and the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska.

(a) The questions to be included in this census and the detailed information to be enumerated shall be determined upon by a committee consisting of the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the Works Progress Administrator, the Chairman of the Social Security Board, the Chairman of the Central Statistical Board, and the Director of the Census, or their authorized representatives.

SEC. 2. The provisions, including penalties, of the act approved June 18, 1929 (46 Stat. 21; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 13, ch. 4), except sections 9 to 11, inclusive, thereof, shall, so far as not inapplicable, apply to the taking of the census provided for in section 1 of this act: Provided, however, That temporary personnel required to carry out the purposes of this act shall be appointed without regard to the Classification Act of 1923: Provided further, That the administering agency is authorized to call upon the other departments or agencies of the Federal Government for information relating to, and for assistance in connection with the census herein provided for; and the administering agency is authorized to cooperate with and to use the information secured by such State and local agencies as may have data pertinent to this census.

SEC. 3. To meet the expenses of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make available from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 such an amount as the President may determine to be necessary.

SEC. 4. The President is authorized to make such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and such provisions of the Census Act of 1902, as amended, as are applicable.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill may be considered under unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to ask the gentlewoman from New Jersey a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, it was my impression that the Labor Department was keeping quite up to the minute in the matter of a census of the unemployed; also that the W. P. A. had reported to the President on a census taken by them in February of this year. What is the object of this census to be taken in the future?

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that none of the others is complete. This is to try to provide as complete a census of the unemployed as we can in order that we may know exactly what the condition is with regard to unemployment. May I say, too, that the facilities of post offices and unemployment agencies will be used. It is not a compulsory census.

Mr. RICH. The only criticism is that we have taken a census of various kinds during the last 2 or 3 years.

Mrs. NORTON. Not since 1930.

Mr. RICH. According to the reports of the Labor Department and according to the reports of W. P. A., we had a census within the last year.

Mrs. NORTON. Not a complete census.

Mr. RICH. I cannot quite understand the necessity for taking another census unless it be for the purpose of getting people back to work on the Government pay roll. This administration has made a success of that.

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that under the provisions of the bill I do not think the expense will be very great, and we are hoping to get a more complete census so that we have some authentic figures on the unemployment situation throughout the country.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to ask the gentlewoman from New Jersey a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentlewoman knows that I am very much interested in a census of children, minors under 18 years of age.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes, I know; we talked about that.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I introduced a bill asking for an employment census of children 18 years of age and under. I believe the following letter from Miss Lenroot, of the Children's Bureau, shows that children will be included in the census, and I am extremely glad.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, CHILDREN'S BUREAU,
Washington, August 17, 1937.

Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MRS. ROGERS: Following our conversation of yesterday, I have considered the provisions of the Black bill (S. 2705) in connection with the objectives of your bill (H. R. 3475). It had occurred to me that a simple amendment to the Black bill specifically providing for the inclusion of information concerning the education, employment, and family status of minors under 18 years of age would accomplish, in the main, the objectives of your proposal. However, I find on studying the Black bill and discussing the matter with persons in the Department of Labor that the items which the bill directs should be obtained would necessarily include information as to family status, income, and occupation. It is provided that the Secretary of Labor is to be on a committee which is to formulate the information to be enumerated. I can assure you that if a census is taken, this Department will make sure that the information is broken down so as to show the situation with reference to children under 16 and minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years.

Sincerely yours,

KATHARINE F. LENROOT, Chief.

Mrs. NORTON. I think the gentlewoman from Massachusetts is quite right. I believe Miss Perkins will provide for the inclusion of children in the proposed census.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter I have written to the Gold Star Mothers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a clipping from the Evening Star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

(Mr. BIGELOW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1075) to establish the Pipestone National Monument in the State of Minnesota, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the National Park and Planning Commission approved this monument?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2912) to authorize the city of Ketchikan, Alaska, to issue bonds for street improvements, and for other purposes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say to the Delegate from Alaska that I wish a lot more cities in this country would do the same as this city is trying to do, help themselves.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Ketchikan, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, improve, and repair all or any portion of its streets and sidewalks, and also to make such changes, extensions, betterments, and replacements as may thereby be rendered necessary or advisable in its sewers, water systems, electric current lines, telephone lines, and other public utilities; and for such purposes to issue bonds in any amount not exceeding $250,000.

SEC. 2. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the Common Council of the City of Ketchikan shall direct; and the proceeds thereof shall be distributed only for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and direction of said common council from time to time as such proceeds may be required for said purposes.

SEC. 6. The city of Ketchikan is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with the provisions of this act, and for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said municipality in financing any of the public works hereinbefore mentioned, or for either; or to enter into contracts with any persons or corporations, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain, subject to the provisions of this act, such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said city of Ketchikan and the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, or any other purchaser of the bonds.

SEC. 7. The provisions of the act approved May 28, 1936, entitled "An act to authorize municipal corporations in the Territory of Alaska to incur bonded indebtedness, and for other purposes" (49 Stat. 1388), as amended, shall not affect the issuance or payment of the bonds authorized by this act or any proceedings taken hereunder.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 8, after the word "payable", strike out the words "in such"; and in line 9, strike out the words "medium of payment and."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THREE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST PERMANENT SETTLEMENT IN DELAWARE RIVER VALLEY

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate Joint Resolution 135, to amend the public resolution approved June 5, 1936, entitled "Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government of Sweden and individuals an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the first permanent settlement in the Delaware River Valley, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 135

Resolved, etc., That section 1 of Public Resolution No. 102 of the Seventy-fourth Congress is amended by inserting a comma and the words "the Government of Finland" after the words "Government of Sweden" and before the word "and"; and by inserting the words "and Finnish" after the word "Swedish" and before the word "colonists."

That section 2 be amended by inserting the words "the Government of Finland" after the words "Government of Sweden" and before the word "and."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely amends public resolution approved June 5, 1936, entitled "Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to extend to the Government of Sweden and individuals an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the first permanent settlement in the Delaware River Valley."

It is proposed by the present resolution to include Finland in that invitation. That is all there is to it. It does not involve the expenditure of money or anything else except the invitation just referred to.

There is a good reason for doing so. Three States are involved in this celebration; namely, Delaware, New Jersey, and my own State of Pennsylvania. The Governors of the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania have wired our Foreign Affairs Committee and asked that Finland be included in the invitation, and our committee favorably reported the pending resolution.

The background of this situation should be understood, because there is some opposition to the resolution.

Finland, at the time of this colonization, was an integral part of Sweden. Finland and Sweden were one and the same as far as governments were concerned, and the colonists who came to this country were composed largely of Finnish people. Like all the other colonization efforts of that day, this particular colony was promoted by a trading company. The admiral of one of the fleets that first came to this country was a Finn, Admiral Klass Fleming, and in one boatload that came 92 out of the 105 colonists were Finns. That was the expedition of March 1656. Ninety-two of the total number of colonists were Finns, and it is pretty safe to assume that at least one-third of all the colonists in this little Swedish colony were Finns or of Finnish extraction.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. May I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that probably that is one reason they are so willing to pay their debts, whereas other nations have refused.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I understand the State of Delaware invited Sweden to participate in this celebration and now we are trying as a Federal Government to have included in that invitation by Delaware the country of Finland. I cannot understand why the invitation should not come from the State of Delaware rather than the Federal Government taking action.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. At the time of the original grant, parts of Pennsylvania and New Jersey were included, and in this celebration Pennsylvania and New Jersey are definitely included. It is not Delaware alone. The Governors of Pennsylvania and New Jersey want Finland included and although we have not a telegram from the Governor of Delaware I understand that a Finnish delegation visited him and he expressed his approval that Finland should be included in the invitation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. A State cannot invite the representatives of another country. That has to be done through the Federal Government.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Yes; and that is the purpose of the bill. In bringing this matter to a close, I want to emphasize the fact that we are going to celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the first permanent colony in the Delaware Valley.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. We are inviting that little country that had a very definite part in the colonization of this territory, whose people played a prominent part and probably were a majority of the colonists. We are also extending the invitation to a nation that has been very friendly to the United States in recent years, and whose sense of honor and responsibility stands out above all others in the payment of its national debt to us.

All we are doing is holding a party, you may say. We have invited Sweden, and they should be invited. We want to extend the same invitation to Finland, and two of the three states involved in this celebration have requested that we include Finland in the celebration. There is nothing selfish about it. It is not going to detract from the glory of Sweden in any respect. It is merely extending a little recognition to Finland.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope when this bill comes to a vote I will have the support of all the Members who have a friendly and kindly feeling toward this little nation of Finland for what they did in the past and for what they are doing now. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES].

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel at all with my colleagues from Pennsylvania in their desire to include the little country of Finland in this three hundredth anniversary. Personally I have nothing but the highest regard for that little country. However, we have here a somewhat complicated situation.

Early in 1936 at the request of the State of Delaware the House passed a resolution which was signed on June 5, 1936, inviting the Government of Sweden to participate in the celebration commemorating the three hundredth anniversary of the first permanent settlement in the Delaware River Valley. This was done at the request of the State of Delaware. It is true at the time of that colonization the land which was first purchased from the Indians by the Swedes did include a section of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The Government of Sweden naturally would not do anything or take any steps whatever to participate before receiving an official invitation from the United States Government.

When it did receive the invitation in August 1936 Sweden accepted and, as I understand it, the Swedish Government appropriated 350,000 crowns for expenses incidental to the preparation in Sweden and for expenses connected with the voyage to America. In addition to that, the Swedish people raised something like 250,000 crowns and they are at the present time carving a monument to be erected on a plat of land which was known as "The Rocks" in Delaware, where the first landing of these colonists took place. That monument will be here erected in time for the dedication in June 1938.

A group of Swedish-American people has worked on this celebration for nearly 30 years. Some 12 years ago they raised $450,000. The first step in connection with this celebration was the building of a museum in Philadelphia. During the last year this same group of people has received public subscriptions from the Swedish-American throughout the United States of over $50,000 to help entertain the officials and representatives of the Swedish Government who will come here in 1938. In July 1936, a month after the original resolution was passed which invited the Government of Sweden, the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed a resolution asking the United States to invite the Government of Finland.

I certainly have no quarrel with the desire to have invited to the celebration the representatives of this splendid country, which has such a fine type of people, but I do not think it is quite fair to the Government of Sweden at this stage to include a resolution inviting Finland as a coequal of the government which was originally invited to participate in the celebration. Three hundred years ago Finland was a province of Sweden, and the two countries were under one flag, the Swedish flag. The expedition was financed jointly by the Swedish Government and the trading company, and the land was purchased in the name of the Swedish Government.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I think it would be of interest to know how long ago the two countries separated. When was Finland divorced from Sweden, and when did it become a separate country?

Mr. HOLMES. I cannot tell the gentleman exactly the date.

Personally, I feel there is more involved than simply the question of an invitation. There is also here a diplomatic situation which to my mind is somewhat serious. I think it would have been far better if the Legislature of Pennsylvania had directed its attention to one invitation, in view of the fact that Delaware had already made this request and the President had sent the invitation to Sweden. The resolution of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania was passed 30 days after the resolution here was approved. I think we are making a rather serious mistake in adopting this resolution today.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman really believe it is a serious mistake to refuse to recognize the desire of the Finnish Government to participate in this celebration? They have expressed a desire to participate in this celebration, for Finland, at the time of the colonization, was a part of Sweden.

Mr. HOLMES. I do not know that such a desire has been expressed by the Government of Finland. There are some Finnish-American people who have been very active in wanting to participate, but as far as the Government itself is concerned, I do not know that it has ever evinced such a desire.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. The ancestors of these Finnish-Americans played a very important part in the colonization, and it is only natural they would be interested in participating in the celebration.

Mr. HOLMES. That is quite true, I may say to the gentleman. The record shows there were quite a number of Finnish people who took part in later expeditions. However, there were a good many other nationalities who took part in the expedition.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLMES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. The complication in this situation arises not through any fault of the United States Government so much as it does from the failure on the part of the States which intend to participate in this celebration to request the Government of the United States to extend the invitation to Finland. I think this is where the complication arises.

Mr. HOLMES. Does the gentleman mean originally?

Mr. DONDERO. Originally; yes.

Mr. HOLMES. The gentleman is correct. However, the Congress passed a resolution at the request of the State of Delaware to invite the Swedish Government.

In further answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I may say that I should like to see the United States some time honor the fine little country of Finland in some more outstanding and creditable way, and do it separately. Finland is the only nation which has met her obligations to the United States. She has demonstrated the fine type of her people, the quality of her people, the character of her people, and the honesty of her people. I should like to see some time set aside, when appropriate in the future, when that fine country will be the whole show and can receive proper recognition, and when we can pay Finland a proper tribute for being one of the most outstanding little countries in the world so far as concerns its friendliness to the United States in meeting its obligations, and its good will and friendly feeling for the people of the United States.

The source for the following article on the early settlement of the Swedes in Delaware Valley is Amandus Johnson, Ph. D.:

Two little vessels came from Sweden early in 1638 bearing colonists to establish a settlement on the Delaware River. They anchored in front of what is now part of Wilmington, Del., and five Indian chiefs came on board and sold land, from the cape to Schuylkill, to the Swedish Government, thus including the State of Delaware and part of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Later these chiefs sold more land to the Swedes, so that eventually New Sweden on the Delaware, founded in 1638, included all of Delaware and part of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Maryland.

The Swedish colony on the Delaware was small, but it made large and lasting contributions to American history and civilization. In the Delaware Valley the Swedes elected the first judges, built the first schools, held the first law courts, established the first towns. In this district they laid out the first roads, constructed the first mills, and built the first churches. Three descendants from the Delaware Swedes signed the Declaration of Independence and one of these, John Morton, cast the deciding vote for that immortal document as chairman of the Pennsylvania delegation. Descendants of these same colonists helped to draft the Constitution, and one of them, John Hanson, was elected the first President of the United States in Congress assembled. He stood at the helm of this young Republic at a critical time when Sweden was the first nation to recognize our independence and the first to make a treaty of friendship and commerce with us.

The log cabin, which has played such a conspicuous part in American history, has been traced to the Swedes in Delaware. The first meteorologist and the first translator of a Protestant book into the Indian language, John Campanius, lived in New Sweden from 1643 to 1648. The founder of painting as a fine art in this country and the first organ builder in America was the Swede, Hesselius.

Since these early days there have been many leaders of Swedish descent. John Ericsson's invention of the Monitor came at the crucial moment in the Civil War that not only saved the naval supremacy of the North, but strengthened its courage to win. John Dahlgren invented the gun that carried the Monitor to fame, and John Warden commanded it—a complete Viking ship. Even in our own time, Charles Augustus Lindbergh has added a glorious contribution.

The Thirteen Original States were settled by three European nations; the English, the Dutch, and the Swedes. The first two have had their celebrations and it is only fitting and proper that the Swedes should have their tercentennial.

[From the Delaware Tercentenary Bulletin]

THE DEDICATION OF THE SWEDISH MONUMENT

On June 27, 1938, as a part of the celebration of Delaware's Tercentenary, the monument presented by the Swedish people and erected in the new State Park at The Rocks will be unveiled and dedicated in a ceremony in which representatives of the Kingdom of Sweden along with representatives of the United States and the States of Delaware, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey, among others, will take part.

It is planned that the Swedish Royal Commission shall arrive in the Delaware River on a Swedish warship, convoyed by American warships and accompanied by one of the great Swedish liners, with perhaps a thousand unofficial tourists aboard. It is expected that the ships will be docked at the Wilmington Marine Terminal in the morning of June 27 and the official party thence conveyed in small yachts up the Christina River to The Rocks, where they will disembark and be received by the official representatives of the United States Government and the State of Delaware. The ceremony of unveiling and dedication of the monument will then take place. It has been officially announced that the Swedish Commission will be headed by the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Sweden.

Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf of Sweden, Duke of Skane, is the eldest son of King Gustaf Adolf V and his late wife, Queen Victoria. He was born in Stockholm, November 11, 1882. His college education was begun in the University of Stockholm and finished at Upsala University. In accordance with the traditions of his family, he entered the army at an early age and now holds a general's commission.

On June 15, 1905, he married Princess Margareta of Great Britain, daughter of the Duke of Connaught and granddaughter of the English Queen Victoria. Of this marriage five children were born, Princes Gustaf Adolf, Sigvard, Bertil, and Carl Johan and Princess Ingrid, now Crown Princess of Denmark. Princess Margareta died May 1, 1930.

On November 3, 1923, the Crown Prince married his present wife, Lady Louise Mountbatten, daughter of Prince Louis of Battenberg and Princess Victoria of Hessen and granddaughter of Queen Victoria of England.

The royal government of Sweden is notably democratic in its relations with the people. Besides his interest in archaeology, the Prince's especial hobby is gardening. The Princess takes part in charity work and other forms of social activity.

The Prince and Princess were in the United States in 1926 to take part in the unveiling in Washington of a statue of the great Swedish inventor, John Ericsson, designer of the original Monitor, the first warship with revolving turrets, which defeated the Confederate ironclad Merrimac during the Civil War, and to attend the dedication of the John Morton Memorial Museum in Philadelphia. Having arrived at the Pennsylvania Station in Wilmington May 31, they were received by Mayor G. W. K. Forrest and a committee of citizens, and bouquets of flowers were presented to the Princess. The party was then escorted to Old Swedes' Church, where a large crowd had assembled. Boy Scouts lined the walk from the street to the church door and gave a salute with bugles and drums.

Rev. Dr. F. M. Kirkus, rector of Trinity Parish, and Rev. Robert Bell, vicar of Old Swedes, greeted the party at the church door. Bishop Philip Cook delivered an address and presented a silver plaque engraved with a picture of Old Swedes Church and a commemorative inscription, to which the Prince made a fitting response. The ceremonies ended with a prayer by the bishop.

After the ceremonies in Philadelphia and Washington, the royal party crossed the country to San Francisco, visiting the chief centers of the Swedish-American population on the way. During this visit to America the Prince, who is internationally known as an archaeologist and an expert on ancient Chinese art, received honorary degrees from Princeton, Yale, University of Chicago, and other institutions of learning.

The Delaware Tercentenary Commission takes pleasure in presenting in this bulletin portraits of these expected guests, furnished by American-Swedish News Exchange.

HISTORIC NAMES REVIVED

By act of the legislature the name of the Christiana River has been changed to Christina River, its original title. It was so named by the first settlers in 1638 in honor of Queen Christina of Sweden. In the course of time, no one knows when or why, an additional letter "a" crept in, which has now been legally eliminated.

By similar action the new Northeast Boulevard is to be called Governor Printz Boulevard after the Swedish officer, who was Governor of the colony here from 1643 to 1653.

SWEDISH TERCENTENARY LECTURES

One important element in Sweden's participation in the Tercentenary is furnished by her universities. Thirty professors of the highest standing in the various arts and sciences will be in this country during the academic year 1937–38, to deliver lectures in American universities and colleges. Scholars of high repute in the fields of architecture, art, archeology, astronomy, botany, chemistry, economics, engineering, geology, literature, medicine, philosophy, physics, and theology are included in the list.

The University of Delaware has been alert to avail itself of the opportunities thus provided in connection with the opening of its new chemistry building. On October 15 and 16 of this year, this building will be dedicated and at the same time a conference on chemistry will be held at which the principal speaker will be Dr. The Svedberg, professor of physical chemistry in the University of Upsala.

Dr. Svedberg is a scientist internationally known and honored. Besides conducting his courses in the great University of Upsala, he has lectured in this country at the Universities of Wisconsin, Chicago, and Harvard. In 1925 he was awarded the Nobel prize in physics.

Besides this definite arrangement, the University of Delaware has invited Dr. Gregor Paulsson of Upsala, who is also curator of the national museum, to lecture on art; Dr. Eli Heckscher, president of the Economic Institute of Stockholm, to lecture on the economic problems of the world, and Dr. Axel F. Endstrom, director of the Swedish Engineering Academy, to lecture on some engineering subject. No definite dates for these lectures have yet been arranged.

The new chemistry building to be dedicated in October is a gift of "a generous citizen of Delaware." It will be one of the finest and best-equipped buildings of its kind in this country, planned according to the best and most-advanced ideas for the construction of such buildings.

NEW JERSEY AND CALIFORNIA WILL PARTICIPATE

The State of New Jersey has authorized the creation of a commission to arrange an appropriate celebration of the three hundredth anniversarry of the settlement and to "participate in the interstate and international celebration to be held in the city of Wilmington."

The State of California is also preparing to be represented in the tercentenary. A resolution is now before its legislature, authorizing the appointment of a State commission to attend the celebration.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The Chair will count.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, in about 1350 Finland was an integral part of the Kingdom of Sweden, and then later, in 1809, Finland was taken over by Russia, and later became an independent nation. At the time of the establishment of this colony there were a number of Finnish people who came with the Swedish people to locate in the Delaware Valley. During all those years the Finnish people were a separate nationality. They remained loyal to themselves and fought down through the ages until they established themselves as a democracy, and now they are a nation themselves loved and respected by all the leading nations of the world.

There is one thing that is paramount in that country, and that is the integrity they have kept with themselves throughout their entire history, the integrity they have kept with the world, and with this country today. [Applause.]

It is the only nation that has paid its debt to the United States [applause], and in recognition of that fact alone they should be given a right to participate in this celebration. The sons and daughters of those pioneering ancestors who have adopted the United States as their home will appreciate this recognition, because they are rightly proud of the Finnish blood which flows through their veins. I have the pleasure and honor to enjoy the confidence of thousands of those people, and I know how loyal they are to honesty and justice.

There is no quarrel with Sweden. I have not heard the Swedish people say they did not want the Finnish Government to participate. They do want them to participate. Sweden is proud of the fact that at one time they were the owner of this wonderful little nation, and they are happy to have this nation participate in the celebration. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the Governor of New Jersey in the invitation to the people of Finland, but I support him for an entirely different reason than, perhaps, an historical one. I support him because I think the people of Finland should be invited to every celebration that is held in the United States. [Applause]. If there is one country in the world that we should invite to a celebration or that we should have a special celebration for, it is Finland. They are an incentive to the whole world, they are an example to the whole world, and they have certainly shown us that if there is one country in this world friendly to the United States, it is Finland, by having paid its obligations to us on the day they were due, and I hope this resolution passes. [Applause].

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am just going to say a few words in explanation. I feel there is no opposition, or very little opposition, to this bill. It was passed unanimously by the Senate. There is not much to it. Last year we passed a bill at the request of the States of Delaware, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, to invite the Swedish Government to participate in this celebration, the invitation stating "and other individuals."

The Historical Society of Pennsylvania, through this act, extended an invitation to the Finnish Minister to participate, and he went down to the State Department and they concluded the language was not quite broad enough, and that is what brought the matter up.

When the bill came over to the House from the Senate, we waited until at least two States had joined in the request, and they were the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey. They requested that the Finnish Government be invited.

It would be very embarrassing if we did not do this, and I hope the Members of the House will pass this little amendment. I know it will give great satisfaction to them and to the people at large who so greatly admire the Finnish Government for keeping their obligations with the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield gladly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to join respectfully in the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of this committee. I am not sure I understand the resolution, but it seems to me under the circumstances, if we possibly can, this resolution ought to be unanimously passed by the House.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I really hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] will withdraw his objection, so we can pass it unanimously.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It ought to be passed unanimously.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MONEY AND CREDIT—FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF 12 FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS NECESSARY

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, from coast to coast and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf our Nation is torn by conflict between employer and employee. Everywhere, it seems, the press reports little but strikes. It is a struggle on the part of the man who toils for a greater share in the fruits of his labor. But the greatest and most important strike is yet to take place, and it must be won if the American people are to win back that freedom which was won through so much sacrifice in the days of our founding fathers. That strike, which should be called immediately if the principle of majority rule is to be perpetuated in our democracy, is a strike against control of the Nation's money by a handful of selfish, irresponsible individuals.

Workers everywhere are striking for recognition, for higher wages, and shorter hours, striking for a fuller share of that freedom and opportunity which only our democracy can offer. But up to the present time there has been little effort to gain recognition of Congress' right to control money and credit in behalf of the people and to exert authority over money and credit which vitally concern wages, working conditions, rents, prices, and the whole economic and social well-being of our people.

The Constitution specifically gives to Congress, and to Congress alone, the power "to coin money and regulate the value thereof", an inherent attribute of national sovereignty. Congress has exerted this authority insofar as the coinage and printing of money is concerned. But specie and paper money comprise only a fraction of the money used in business, commerce, finance, and personal transactions today. So in carrying out its mandate, Congress has given value to approximately six and a half million dollars now in circulation. But there are more than $53,000,000,000 deposited in banks. Credit, not gold, forms the basis for our currency, and the bank check has largely replaced the dollar bill as the circulating medium.

Once Congress alone could give to a piece of paper the power to buy goods and services. Today, you or I, by writing our signatures, can transform a piece of paper into an instrument with a purchasing power equivalent to the amount of credit a bank will extend. If the founding fathers believed in 1787 that it was essential to the welfare and progress of the Nation to place in the hands of Congress sole control over money—and events have demonstrated their wisdom in doing so—then it is just as vital today that Congress have sole control over bank-check currency which has largely replaced coin and paper money. Congress has not only failed to exert proper control over credit currency but it has actually delegated to a private agency, the Federal Reserve System, the control which should rest in the hands of the Government.

It is time for the people to strike, to protest against the loss of this primary power, and to maintain their picket lines and continue their demonstrations until they regain the control they should never have abandoned.

The Federal Reserve System was originally intended to provide a fiscal agent for the United States Government to aid the Treasury in the financing of the Government and its agencies. Today we see the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System dominating the whole credit structure and apparently working at cross purposes with the aims of the administration.

The Federal Reserve System was established purposely to correlate banking throughout the Nation, but only since the Banking Act of 1935 has the Board at Washington been able to exert real authority over the 12 district banks. Congress in 1935 did take unto itself some of the power over money and credit granted to it by the Constitution but, as events will show, it did not go far enough.

Furthermore, the Federal Reserve System was originally intended to provide an elastic currency to be expanded or contracted as the Government saw fit. Yet with all the powers that have been granted it recently to assist the administration in smashing the chains of deflation, the Board has acted in accordance with the conservative opinions of private wealth and has been seeking to raise interest rates and check the rising tide of recovery. The Board and the System have demonstrated that where public and private interests clash, private interests prevail. Far from serving as a fiscal agent and ally of the Government, the Federal Reserve System has become an outright opponent of the liberal aims of the White House.

Unfortunately, discussions of money and banking, and credit and finance are carried on in terminology which is rather baffling to the average citizen. Because his relations with banks are usually most fleeting, consisting mainly of operating a small checking account, he is inclined to shrug the whole matter aside as of little concern to him. Yet the future of every man and woman, whether a wage or salaried worker, whether a skilled or unskilled laborer, a business or professional man, depends on how the control of credit is exercised.

By manipulating credit, the operator can actually raise or lower real wages by affecting the price level. He can produce an inflationary boom or a deflationary collapse. He can encourage new building or he can virtually extinguish construction activity. He can embroil us in domestic or foreign conflict, or he can work for local peace and amicable foreign relations. He can insure vigorous economic health for the Nation by providing adequate and continued supply of credit or he can weaken the economic body by starving it of its lifeblood—credit.

It is in violation of the intent if not the letter of the Constitution to delegate to a privately owned system of banks the power to surfeit or starve business and industry. It is the height of folly to permit a group of private citizens to affect the interest rate that the Government must pay to obtain working capital. We all recall with shame the time when President Cleveland was forced to beg J. P. Morgan to replenish the Nation's gold supply. It is not pleasant to remember that one individual was able to demand and obtain terms from our great Nation. Yet such is the power that we have vested in private hands today that the Government can be compelled to pay a higher rate for money just because a group of individuals think it better that the money market be tightened.

At a time when new capital is sorely needed to finance the building of new homes, factories, and other necessities of our individual and group life, it is sheer folly to let a group of individuals place a chilling hand on recovery by freezing two and a half billions of bank credit. It is almost inconceivable that a Congress, representative of a great democracy, would delegate its power over money and credit to a private agency.

The whole history of the Federal Reserve System from 1913 to the present is a record of action in behalf of private gain and studied disregard of what the people through their Representatives in Congress believe to be essential. There was the horrible example in 1920 when the Reserve Board willfully precipitated a panic. And the even more glaring example in 1928–29 when the Reserve failed to act in the interests of the public and use its powers to curb overspeculation. What of the recent deflationary policy of the new Board in tightening credit and increasing interest rates with recovery only starting?

Criticism is not enough. Restrictive legislation on the actions of these private groups will not suffice. Congress must act and act immediately to recapture the essential right to regulate the value of money, in this case bank check or credit money, and to use it for the benefit of the Nation and not the stockholders of the Federal Reserve System and the big-money interests.

There is now pending before the House of Representatives a bill sponsored by Representative WRIGHT PATMAN and 152 Members of this House, which provides for the purchase of the Federal Reserve banks by the Government. The cost in dollars would be one hundred and thirty-two millions, only a fraction of the billion dollars spent to buy and sterilize gold, and the benefits to be gained from Government ownership of the system would be incalculable.

In discussing this bill with Dr. Luther A. Harr, secretary of banking of Pennsylvania, he made the following comment:

> The purchase of the banks would make the system in fact as well as in fancy the Government's fiscal agency. Gone would be the clashes between the Treasury and the Federal Reserve. The bill would end the anomalous situation whereby the privately owned system has sought to tighten money markets when the President, acting in the interests of the Nation, has sought to maintain easy money.

Dr. Harr's opinion carries more than ordinary weight. He is an authority on finances and banking and has made an enviable reputation as secretary of banking in the State of Pennsylvania. A student of public affairs and an ardent supporter of the President, he has done much to revitalize the banking situation in my native State. His work has been of such a high character and his authoritative opinions have been respected to such an extent that the people of Philadelphia will, next November, undoubtedly elect him to the high office of city treasurer to straighten out the badly tangled financial situation in that city.

Passage of the Patman bill would end banker domination of credit. I am not concerned so much about the private gain which flows to the bankers as a result of their control as I am over the fact that bankers are notoriously timid, outrageously shortsighted, ridiculously conservative, and frequently completely out of touch with current conditions.

Intelligent control of credit is essential if the Nation is to obtain a balanced recovery. And we can never have intelligent control as long as credit is subject to the fears and alarms of the most reactionary group in the Nation.

With nine to ten million still unemployed, with billions of dollars of new building needed, with our Nation facing an agricultural crisis because of wind and water erosion, with one-third of the Nation still denied equality of economic opportunity, the leaders of the Federal Reserve, exhibiting their traditional shortsightedness, have been prating of inflation and using all their influence to curb recovery.

The influence of the private owners of the System is apparently being exercised to prevent the Patman bill from receiving the attention and discussion it merits. There is nothing sacred about the Federal Reserve. Let us have a public hearing on the Patman bill during this term of Congress and give its proponents and opponents an opportunity to discuss its provisions. The Patman bill is the first attempt which has been made at this session of Congress to win back public control over credit. The least Congress can do is to give it the closest scrutiny.

I cannot conceive that our people, when they realize what dangers are inherent in the continued private control over credit, will permit such domination any longer. I am convinced that the rank and file of the Nation will demand that Congress and Congress only control credit.

The Patman bill seems to afford a splendid opportunity for those of us who resent banker domination of our national economic life to convert our belief into action. Let us make our demand so loud, so determined, and so continuous that those who would seek to bury the Patman bill will no longer dare to thwart the public and will, at the earliest opportunity, grant a public hearing on this most important measure.

RECESS AT DISCRETION OF THE SPEAKER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think we have reached the point in the proceedings where we should grant the Speaker power to declare a recess at his will. I have discussed this matter with the minority leader and with the Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that for the remainder of the day the Speaker be granted the privilege of recessing the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, if a recess is declared, it will be arranged to ring the bells 10 minutes before the House assembles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

CLASSIFICATION AND PAY OF LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of S. 2578, to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to continue the existing system of classification and pay of positions of lighthouse keepers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of S. 2578, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of the act approved July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 1003), the Secretary of Commerce is authorized, in his discretion, to continue the existing system governing the classification and pay of the positions of lighthouse keepers, pending the enactment by the Congress of legislation establishing and prescribing a system of classification and pay applicable to these positions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON HAWAII

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Concurrent Resolution 18, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Hawaii, which shall be composed of not to exceed 12 Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and not to exceed 12 Members of the House of Representatives and the Delegate from Hawaii, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The committee shall select a chairman from among its members. The committee shall cease to exist upon making its report to Congress pursuant to this resolution.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a comprehensive investigation and study of the subject of statehood and of other subjects relating to the welfare of the Territory of Hawaii. The committee shall report to the Senate and to the House of Representatives not later than January 15, 1938, the results of its investigation and study, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it deems necessary or desirable.

SEC. 3. For the purposes for this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act, as a whole or by subcommittee, at such times and places as it deems advisable, to hold such hearings, to administer such oaths and affirmations, to take such testimony, and to have such printing and binding done as it deems necessary.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman think a committee composed of 12 Members of the House and 12 Members of the Senate would be such a big party that they would have too good a time over there? It will be too large to be of any good for business; about right for a pleasant trip, however. I think the committee ought to be cut down to three and then they would do better business, if there is to be any business connected with the trip.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

This is a Senate concurrent resolution to create a congressional committee to visit Hawaii, which, I understand, is a very delightful place. Different from most resolutions, it does not entail any expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the gentleman think that the gentleman should add the word "now"—that it does not incur any expense to the Government of the United States now? When they come back with their report and ask for a whole lot, is it then going to cost the Government nothing?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not know. I am informed that the Hawaiian Legislature has appropriated money to defray the expenses of this trip and to entertain and instruct the delegation in the forms and uses of government.

Mr. RICH. Notwithstanding the fact that the Hawaiian Legislature furnishes the money for this trip and this inspection, is it not a fact that Hawaii is now asking the Federal Government for so many things that require money out of our Treasury that it would be most difficult for anyone to reach the conclusion that it is not going to cost this Government anything? I am sure it will cost us a plenty.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, the Hawaiians are so happy at the moment over the sugar bill that they want to show their appreciation and entertain these 24 Members of Congress.

Mr. RICH. But does not the gentleman think that 24 going over there constitute such a large number that they will have a real party. Perhaps if they would take 350 Members of Congress over there they then could still have a real good time and make it a unanimous congressional party or joy ride.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. SHANNON. This is a gratuity on the part of Hawaii to make the boys feel good, at no expense to themselves. Would it not be far better for this great Government to pay their expenses, and perhaps not have them influenced by this pleasure trip? Does the fact that there is a gratuity in this make it somewhat doubtful of real effectiveness?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, I would not be suspicious at all.

Mr. SHANNON. The gentleman is familiar with Henry George's theory that the underlying thing that destroys all government is gratuities.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I cannot say. I never had much experience with those gratuities.

Mr. SHANNON. Does not the gentleman think it wrong in principle?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not think so. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. What is the gentleman's own opinion as to the effect of our appointing a special committee and the Hawaiian people, through their legislature, paying the expenses of the committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It was considered quite a novel idea for the legislature to invite a congressional committee to come there and pay their expenses, though the gentleman will recall that the Philippines did the same thing a few years ago, a very large committee, so that the Members of the House might become more familiar with the Philippine Islands and their problems.

Mr. McCORMACK. That was a different situation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It may have had the same motive behind it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from New York and to the Members of the House that I have served on the Committee on the Territories practically ever since I have been a Member of this body. We have to deal with Hawaii and Alaska. I gained more information in 2 weaks in Alaska by personal investigation than I have gained in 16 years reading reports and correspondence with reference to the conditions that prevail in that Territory. Whether this is paid for by the Federal Government or not, there ought to be some provision made for members of the Insular Affairs Committee to visit Puerto Rico and the Philippine Islands occasionally. There should also be some provision made for the Committee on the Territories, that has to do with the legislation for Hawaii and Alaska, to visit those Territories and make personal investigation. In my opinion, they can save this Government many millions of dollars by doing so.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. BLAND. And there should be included the members of the Fisheries Committee, so far as the fisheries of Alaska are concerned.

Mr. RANKIN. By all means. I wonder if the Members of the House know that the fish taken from Alaskan waters every year are worth more money than the wheat crop of Ohio or the cotton crop of Louisiana?

Mr. McCORMACK. And the Ways and Means Committee on the tax question?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I understand that in 1919 Puerto Rico issued the same invitation. Was that the correct date, may I ask the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND]?

Mr. BLAND. That is correct; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] and I are the only two Members in the House now who were on that trip.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it should be placed in the RECORD at this time that the people of Hawaii contribute to the Federal Treasury of the United States the same as the citizens of Michigan, California, Colorado, or any other State. Is that not true?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I so understand.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And that they have the same right at all times to invite Members of this Congress over there, paying their expenses—and I might say I am not going on the trip—as any State of this Union has the right to invite Members of Congress there to look into their affairs.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Would it not be possible to show the proper appreciation for this invitation and amend the resolution so that this Government will pay the expenses?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Well, a plan has been pretty well worked out, as the Delegate from Hawaii has stated many times, and some offense might be taken. It is better to let it go as it is.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. It seems to me that in face of the passage of the sugar bill the people of Hawaii might be very unhappy at the present time, and by the tendering of this generous offer they are heaping coals of fire on our heads, but does not the gentleman think that the committee that goes to the Hawaiian Islands would be more independent in their thought if the expenses of that journey were paid by the United States Government rather than by Hawaii, because it is simply the people of one State, almost, visiting the people of another State.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, I do not think this delegation will be unduly influenced by the payment of their expenses by the Hawaiian Government.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I was just thinking about the situation we are in today. We just sent a committee that has returned from a similar mission to Hawaii. Does not the gentleman think it would be a hardship, probably unnecessarily imposed on the members of the Committee on Territories, to force them to go over there again on a similar mission?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, I imagine they will be quite reluctant.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a short observation?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. It seems to me this invitation should be accepted in the spirit in which it is given. No Member of Congress who has not visited the Hawaiian Islands can realize what the American flag has done for those islands. It is the greatest melting pot on the face of the earth, and the American flag with the American schoolhouse has brought about a transformation. It is certainly enlightening to every person who has visited the islands to see the effect the American schoolhouse has had on the young Chinese, the young Japanese, the young Koreans, the young Malayans, and other varied groups of people who live on those islands. I trust the House will support this resolution.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. SHANNON. If the gentleman will not consent to an amendment to do away with the evil this will have upon this new element that has grown up who have the idea that the way to get things is by giving, I am going to insist upon a roll call. Let the United States Government pay for it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I trust the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. FLANNERY. Do I understand this is an invitation from Hawaii?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. FLANNERY. And we propose, as the guests, to pay for our own dinner, as it were? I say it would be an affront to the hospitality of those people. It would be a gesture of insult to a generous people.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am afraid it would.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in reference to the consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 18, to provide for the creation of a Joint Committee on Hawaii, authorized and directed to conduct a comprehensive investigation and study of the subject of statehood and of other subjects relating to the welfare of the Territory of Hawaii, I desire to make the following statement:

When the great English circumnavigator, Capt. James Cook, discovered the Hawaiian Islands in 1778, he started a train of events that has logically and in natural sequence led up to this moment, when I stand before you as the representative of the people of those islands asking the Congress of the United States to grant their plea for admission into the Union as a sovereign State.

Hawaii was made known to the world when America was just beginning its long fight for independence, when the United States of America had yet to be born out of the aspirations of the Thirteen Colonies to perpetuate that independence, when the western empire was yet to be carved out of the wilderness and organized into States that were taken into the Union on terms of equality with the original group, and when this Nation had yet to absorb into its vast domain the many peoples that found here a refuge against tyranny and an opportunity to enjoy the fruits of liberty denied them in their former homes.

The Nation created in that period has endured since then because its principles of government were based on fundamentals of democracy and because its institutions applied those principles to all alike. The right of a free people to rule themselves, the right of the governed to participate in their Government, is the keystone of this edifice of freedom. New lands were promptly organized as Territories and as promptly admitted as States; new peoples were offered the privilege of joining with their predecessors in allegiance to this Nation and in sharing with the older peoples the duties and responsibilities, and the rights of American citizenship.

Thus has America grown great in moral leadership, in area, in population, and in wealth. Soon the young Nation had spanned a continent, and faced the Pacific Ocean as well as the Atlantic. A war fought to gain the blessings of freedom for a neighboring people brought America out of its continental isolation to the position of a colonial empire, a condition not previously experienced nor contemplated. Now comes the time when America must decide what place in the Nation these new communities may take, whether the American ideals and the historical precedents shall be followed or whether a new, an undemocratic, and an un-American policy shall be adopted.

As an American, as one whose Yankee forebears helped conquer the wilderness to create this Nation and fought to throw off the colonial yoke, whose immediate ancestors helped bring Hawaii under the American flag, and one who speaks for a people loyal to that flag, proud to serve it and anxious to do so as full-fledged citizens, I say there can be only one answer. When a community can show it possesses the fundamental necessities for self-government, this Nation can only answer, "The right to become a State is yours. We grant you that inestimable right on proof of your capacity for self-government, of your ability to maintain a republican form of government for your people, of your loyalty to the National Government, and of your desire to share its burdens."

Hawaii is in every respect fit for statehood. In area it exceeds three States, and is nearly equal to two others. In population it exceeds that of four States, and is running a close rate with four others. In taxes it pays into the Federal Treasury more than some 16 States and five times more than is expended upon it for local purposes. As an organized territory for over 35 years it has developed into a modern American community on a par with any other part of the Union by the ordinary standards of American life.

Historically, Hawaii has even a better claim to an affirmative answer to its plea. From the time of Captain Cook to the time of annexation in 1898, Hawaii maintained itself as an independent nation; first as a monarchy and later as a republic. Through the influence of the American missionaries who first brought Christianity to Hawaii in 1820, through its own Hawaiian leaders and through the work of later missionaries of different religious sects, Hawaii has been a Christian nation for over 100 years.

Its government follows the best western models. Its statute law was adopted from that of New York; its public-school system from Massachusetts.

The language of Hawaii is English. English will carry you from one end of the Territory to the other without the slightest difficulty. English is the one language that we all know; the language of the government and the schools; of business and social usage; and it is the American idiom that we know and use.

Hawaii has no other background than that of independence until it came under the American flag. At the time of annexation its entire body of law and its administrative organization was incorporated as part of the new Territorial government with a minimum of adjustment. Its president became the first Governor and its public-service employees retained their positions with practically no changes.

The reason for this is the fact that the influence of America, closer by far to Hawaii than any other nation, had been paramount for many years. There had been times when Hawaii's destinies might have been diverted into other channels. Russia showed some interest in the islands when that nation was still in possession of Alaska and had outposts in California. France had at one time the desire to add Hawaii to its South Pacific establishment. Great Britain might easily have become Hawaii's ruler but for its own indifferent policy and the active efforts of Hawaii's American colony to prevent such an end to their hopes. But certainly from 1875 to the time of annexation the entire trend of Hawaiian history was toward union with America.

In every step toward such a consummation, it was recognized that Hawaii had certain inalienable rights, that her status must be an honorable one under the American flag, that the surrender of her sovereignty to the United States carried with it an obligation on the part of the latter to see that the citizens of Hawaii should have no just cause of complaint as to the treatment accorded them. These considerations were accepted by America, were incorporated in the joint resolution of annexation, and were further expressed and carried out in the organic act.

There is no argument against Hawaii as to size, as to numbers, as to wealth, as to its capacity to maintain a republican form of government, nor as to the historical obligation of the United States to at some time grant it statehood. I quote the late great Champ Clark, former Speaker of the House, that—

> A perpetual chrysalis existence as a territory is repugnant to the genius of our institutions and out of harmony with our entire history. Home rule has been our policy from the beginning.

What, then, might be the arguments against our plea? Is it the racial ancestry of our citizenry? Is that an argument that can be raised against a community already under the American flag, any more than it can be raised against any other part of the United States? In a population of 396,715 there are only 85,759 aliens. Many of these would be American citizens if they were eligible for citizenship. Of the citizen population, comprising 310,956, the great majority are native-born Americans.

Is it a doubt as to the loyalty of our citizenry? How anyone can possibly seriously doubt that loyalty is inconceivable. Our absolute American patriotism during the World War, in every phase of the national effort, the National Guard, the naval volunteers, the Liberty bond drives, the food-conservation exactions, is a matter of record. Are we to be found lacking through fear or suspicion of our people without just cause? Is a community that will soon be peopled almost entirely by native-born citizens, whose young formative years have been thoroughly American, to be judged in advance as to their loyalty when every item of evidence shows their complete assimilation of American ideals?

In all sincerity, as one with 20 years' service in the Navy and a wide acquaintance with mainland communities, I doubt if there is under the American flag a more loyal part of America than Hawaii. We accepted annexation wholeheartedly, with all its implications, its burdens, and responsibilities, and we have welded our people into a community united in a spirit of devotion to America, its institutions, and ideals that needs only a brief acquaintance to be recognized.

There is no nationalistic group in Hawaii; no other desire than to continue to be a part of America. There is no group among its citizens looking toward any other nation under whose flag it might work out its destiny. Hawaii is as American as Maine or Texas, as Florida or Washington.

Perhaps the last question that might arise is, "Do the people of Hawaii desire statehood at this time?" Yes; of course, they do. They have desired this culmination of their aspirations since that day in Honolulu when the Hawaiian flag was hauled down and the American flag was hoisted in its place. The platforms of both political parties in Hawaii have always carried a plank in favor of statehood; my bill to grant statehood to Hawaii is but a repetition of similar bills introduced by my predecessors; and no candidate has ever attempted to run for office without pledging his support of this desire. In other words, the people of Hawaii, the great majority of them ardently desire statehood. The Hawaiian people as a whole will never be satisfied with any other political organization but that of a sovereign State of the Union.

The people of Hawaii already share every burden that is laid upon the people of America. Every Federal law of national import applies to Hawaii as it does to continental United States. At the time of annexation American immigration and tariff laws became effective in Hawaii immediately.

The whole body of Federal taxation is just as much in force in the Territory as in any other part of the Union. Whether it be income taxes or inheritance taxes or other internal-revenue imposts. customs, or gas taxes, or processing taxes and code levies, Hawaii pays its share on exactly the same basis as the rest of the country. Indeed, the only difference the change of status would make is in Hawaii's participation in national elections and in the deliberations of the United States Congress and the elections, rather than the appointment of some of the Territorial officers.

As to Hawaii's place in the scheme of national defense, the question of statehood has no adverse effect on that important phase of Hawaii's value to the Nation. Other communities contain major military establishments without destroying the liberties of the adjacent civilian population. I have yet to hear of any military authority seriously advocating that the Hawaiian people must be denied their civil rights as a measure of national defense; that an area greater than Connecticut and Rhode Island, with nearly 400,000 people, organized into a highly developed community, representing hundreds of millions of dollars of capital, and responsible for an average annual trade of $200,000,000, should be denied any degree of self-government as a preventative measure.

Such hypotheses are the talk of jingoes, of an occasional irresponsible layman, of unauthorized and self-appointed spokesmen for the military services.

I have discussed this question with many ranking officers of the Army and Navy, and it is simply ridiculous to consider a military menace in our population there.

The national defense will be loyally supported by the people of Hawaii, whatever their status, and their cooperation would be obtained in the fullest degree if their condition were the most honorable attainable—that of citizens of a state.

There are many more pertinent facts I might submit in amplification or support of the above statements, but I have tried to bring these remarks into as brief a compass as possible.

I hope that the Joint Committee on Hawaii will be able to verify by personal acquaintance the fact that Hawaii is as thoroughly American as any other part of this great Nation and that its people are as loyal citizens as any under the flag.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include certain matter prepared by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to continue the existing system of classification and pay of positions of lighthouse keepers.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothwithstanding the provisions of section 2 of the act approved July 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 1003), the Secretary of Commerce is authorized, in his discretion, to continue the existing system governing the classification and pay of the positions of lighthouse keepers, pending the enactment by the Congress of legislation establishing and prescribing a system of classification and pay applicable to these positions.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS SINEPUXENT BAY, OCEAN CITY, MD.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 7806) authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Sinepuxent Bay in Worcester County, Md., at Ocean City, Md., to replace a bridge already in existence, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after "Street", insert "or South Division Street or Wicomico Street."

Page 2, line 4, after "act", insert "Provided, That notwithstanding the designation made in this act, if, within 3 months after the passage of this act, in response to a duly called and authorized election, the duly qualified and registered voters of Ocean City, Md., should, after participation in such special election, designate a preference for the erection of said bridge at some point other than at one of the three locations set forth in this act, then such designation of the location of said bridge shall be the point fixed for the building of said bridge, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That in the event any site for said bridge be selected of which there is no record in the Office of the Chief of Engineers, said site shall be subject to the final approval of the Secretary of War."

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELECTION CONTEST—ROY v. JENKS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 339.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 339

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 3, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized, pursuant to order of the House, August 18, 1937, to sit and act during the recesses of the Seventy-fifth Congress, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, and to hold such hearings as the committee may determine in connection with the contested-election case of Roy v. Jenks. For the purpose of this resolution, the committee may require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives or the chairman of said committee, and shall be served by any person designated by them or either of them. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the matter herein authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., title 2, secs. 192, 193, and 194).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I could not tell just exactly what this resolution provided, but I was under the impression as I heard it read that it is simply to carry out the direction of the House on day before yesterday relative to the contested-election case of Roy v. Jenks.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman is exactly correct. The resolution passed the other day provided that the whole Committee on Elections should go to Newton, N. H. The pending resolution provides that the whole committee or a subcommittee may go. This makes it so that if some Members cannot go a subcommittee, which would be a portion of the committee, could sit.

The resolution passed the other day did not provide for the administration of oaths. This resolution provides for the administration of oaths and also for the issuance of subpenas.

Mr. SNELL. It is practically the usual resolution we pass in such circumstances.

Mr. NICHOLS. It is the same kind of resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the eradication of slums, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SECTION 1. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to promote the general welfare of the Nation by employing its funds and credit, as provided in this Act, to assist the several States and their political subdivisions to alleviate present and recurring unemployment and to remedy the unsafe and insanitary housing conditions and the acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, in rural or urban communities, that are injurious to the health, safety, and morals of the citizens of the Nation.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 2. When used in this Act—

"(1) The term 'low-rent housing' means decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings within the financial reach of families of low income, and developed and administered to promote serviceability, efficiency, economy, and stability, and embraces all necessary appurtenances thereto. The dwellings in low-rent housing as defined in this Act shall be available solely for families whose net income at the time of admission does not exceed five times the rental (including the value or cost to them of heat, light, water, and cooking fuel) of the dwellings to be furnished such families, except that in the case of families with three or more minor dependents, such ratio shall not exceed six to one.

"(2) The term 'families of low income' means families who are in the lowest income group and who cannot afford to pay enough to cause private enterprise in their locality or metropolitan area to build an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for their use.

"(3) The term 'slum' means any area where dwellings predominate which, by reason of dilapidation, overcrowding, faulty arrangement or design, lack of ventilation, light or sanitation facilities, or any combination of these factors, are detrimental to safety, health, or morals.

"(4) The term 'slum clearance' means the demolition and removal of buildings from any slum area.

"(5) The term 'development' means any or all undertakings necessary for planning, financing (including payment of carrying charges), land acquisition, demolition, construction, or equipment, in connection with a low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project, but not beyond the point of physical completion. Construction activity in connection with a low-rent-housing project may be confined to the reconstruction, remodeling, or repair of existing buildings.

"(6) The term 'administration' means any or all undertakings necessary for management, operation, maintenance, or financing, in connection with a low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project, subsequent to physical completion.

"(7) The term 'Federal project' means any project owned or administered by the Authority.

"(8) The term 'acquisition cost' means the amount prudently required to be expended by a public housing agency in acquiring a low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project.

"(9) The term 'non-dwelling facilities' shall include site development, improvements and facilities located outside building walls (including streets, sidewalks, and sanitary, utility, and other facilities).

"(11) The term 'public housing agency' means any State, county, municipality, or other governmental entity or public body (excluding the Authority), which is authorized to engage in the development or administration of low-rent housing or slum clearance.

"(12) The term 'State' includes the States of the Union, the District of Columbia, and the Territories, dependencies, and possessions of the United States.

"(13) The term 'Authority' means the United States Housing Authority created by section 3 of this Act.

"UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY

"SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created in the Department of the Interior and under the general supervision of the Secretary thereof a body corporate of perpetual duration to be known as the United States Housing Authority, which shall be an agency and instrumentality of the United States.

"(b) The powers of the Authority shall be vested in and exercised by an Administrator, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Administrator shall serve for a term of five years and shall be removable by the President upon notice and hearing for neglect of duty or malfeasance but for no other cause.

"(c) The Administrator shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, shall be eligible for reappointment, and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Neither the Administrator nor any officer or employee of the Authority shall participate in any matter affecting his personal interests or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

"SEC. 4. (a) The Administrator is authorized, subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, and experts, and such employees as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of the Authority under this Act; except that without regard to the civil-service laws he may appoint such employees whose compensation is in excess of $1,980 per annum, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

"(b) Appointment to positions made under the provisions of this Act the annual salary of which is in excess of $7,500 per annum shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate.

"(c) The Administrator may accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services and with the consent of the agency concerned may utilize such officers, employees, equipment, and information of any agency of the Federal, State, or local governments as he finds helpful in the performance of the duties of the Authority. In connection with the utilization of such services, the Authority may make reasonable payments for necessary traveling and other expenses.

"(d) The President may at any time in his discretion transfer to the Authority any right, interest, or title held by any department or agency of the Federal Government in any housing or slum-clearance projects (constructed or in process of construction on the date of enactment of this Act), any assets, contracts, records, libraries, research materials, and other property held in connection with any such housing or slum-clearance projects or activities, any unexpended balance of funds allocated to such department or agency for the development, administration, or assistance of any housing or slum-clearance projects or activities, and any employees who have been engaged in work connected with housing or slum clearance. The Authority may continue any or all activities undertaken in connection with projects so transferred, subject to the provisions of this Act.

"SEC. 5. (a) The principal office of the Authority shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may establish branch offices or agencies in any State, and may exercise any of its powers at any place within the United States. The Authority may, by one or more of its officers or employees or by such agents or agencies as it may designate, conduct hearings or negotiations at any place.

"(b) The Authority shall sue and be sued in its own name, and shall be represented in all litigated matters by the Attorney General or such attorney or attorneys as he may designate.

"(c) The Authority shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

"(d) The Authority shall be granted the free use of the mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government.

"(e) The Authority, including but not limited to its franchise, capital, reserves, surplus, loans, income, assets, and property of any kind, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. Obligations, including interest thereon, issued by public housing agencies in connection with low-rent-housing or slum-clearance projects, and the income derived by such agencies from such projects, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States.

"SEC. 6. (a) The Authority may make such expenditures, subject to audit under the general law, for the acquisition and maintenance of adequate administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for any necessary traveling expenses within the United States, its Territories, dependencies, or possessions, and for such other expenses as may from time to time be found necessary for the proper administration of this Act. Such financial transactions of the Authority as the making of loans, annual contributions, and capital grants, and the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property, and vouchers approved by the Administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all such financial transactions of the Authority shall be audited by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe.

"(b) The provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5) shall apply to all contracts of the Authority for services and to all of its purchases of supplies except when the aggregate amount involved is less than $300.

"(c) The use of funds made available for the purposes of this Act shall be subject to the provisions of section 2 of title 3 of the Treasury and Post Office Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1934 (47 Stat. 1489), and to make such provisions effective every contract or agreement of any kind pursuant to this Act shall contain a provision identical to the one prescribed in section 3 of title 3 of such Act.

"(d) No annual contribution, grant, or loan, and no contract for any annual contribution, grant, or loan, under this Act, shall be undertaken by the Authority except with the approval of the President.

"SEC. 7 (a) The Authority may publish and disseminate information pertinent to the various aspects of housing.

"(b) In January of each year the Authority shall make an annual report to Congress of its operations and expenses, including loans, contributions, and grants made or contracted for, low-rent-housing and slum-clearance project undertaken, and the assets and liabilities of the Authority. Such report shall include operating statements of all projects under the jurisdiction of or receiving the assistance of the Authority, including summaries of the incomes of occupants, sizes of families, rentals, and other related information.

"SEC. 8. The Authority may from time to time make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"LOANS FOR LOW-RENT-HOUSING AND SLUM-CLEARANCE PROJECTS

"SEC. 9. The Authority may make loans to public-housing agencies to assist the development, acquisition, or administration of low-rent-housing or slum-clearance projects by such agencies. Where capital grants are made pursuant to section 11 the total amount of such loans outstanding on any one project and in which the Authority participates shall not exceed the development or acquisition cost of such project less all such capital grants, but in no event shall said loans exceed 90 per centum of such cost. In the case of annual contributions in assistance of low rentals as provided in section 10 the total of such loans outstanding on any one project and in which the Authority participates shall not exceed 90 per centum of the development or acquisition cost of such project. Such loans shall bear interest at such rate not less than the going Federal rate at the time the loan is made, plus one-half of one per centum, shall be secured in such manner, and shall be repaid within such period not exceeding sixty years, as may be deemed advisable by the Authority.

"ANNUAL CONTRIBUTIONS IN ASSISTANCE OF LOW RENTALS

"SEC. 10. (a) The Authority may make annual contributions to public housing agencies to assist in achieving and maintaining the low-rent character of their housing projects. The annual contributions for any such project shall be fixed in uniform amounts, and shall be paid in such amounts over a fixed period of years. No part of such annual contributions by the Authority shall be made available for any project unless and until the State, city, county, or other political subdivision in which such project is situated shall contribute, in the form of cash or tax remissions, general or special, or tax exemptions, at least 20 per centum of the annual contributions herein provided. The Authority shall embody the provisions for such annual contributions in a contract guaranteeing their payment over such fixed period: Provided, That no annual contributions shall be made, and the Authority shall enter into no contract guaranteeing any annual contribution in connection with the development of any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless the project includes the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwellings provided by the project; except that such elimination may, in the discretion of the Authority, be deferred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to families of low income is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families.

"(b) Annual contributions shall be strictly limited to the amounts and periods necessary, in the determination of the Authority, to assure the low-rent character of the housing projects involved. Toward this end the Authority may prescribe regulations fixing the maximum contributions available under different circumstances, giving consideration to cost, location, size, rent-paying ability of prospective tenants, or other factors bearing upon the amounts and periods of assistance needed to achieve and maintain low rentals. Such regulations may provide for rates of contribution based upon development, acquisition or administration cost, number of dwelling units, number of persons housed, or other appropriate factors: Provided, That the fixed contribution payable annually under any contract shall in no case exceed a sum equal to the annual yield at the going Federal rate of interest at the time such contract is made plus 1 per centum, upon the development or acquisition cost of the low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involved: And provided further, That all such annual contributions shall be used first to apply toward any payment of interest or principal on any loan due to the Authority from the public housing agency.

"(c) In case any contract for annual contributions is made for a period exceeding twenty years, the Authority shall reserve the right to reexamine the status of the low-rent-housing project involved at the end of ten years and every five years thereafter; and, at the time of any such reexamination, the Authority may make such modification (subject to all the provisions of this section) in the fixed and uniform amounts of subsequent annual contributions payable under such contract as is warranted by changed conditions and as is consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of the housing project involved. In no case shall any contract for annual contributions be made for a period exceeding sixty years.

"(d) All payments of annual contributions pursuant to this section shall be made out of any funds available to the Authority when such payments are due, except that its capital and its funds obtained through the issuance of obligations pursuant to section 20 (including repayments or other realizations of the principal of loans made out of such capital and funds) shall not be available for the payment of such annual contributions.

"(e) The Authority is authorized, on and after the date of the enactment of this Act, to enter into contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $5,000,000 per annum, on or after July 1, 1938, to enter into additional such contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $7,500,000 per annum, and on or after July 1, 1939, to enter into additional such contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $7,500,000 per annum. Without further authorization from Congress, no new contracts for annual contributions beyond those herein authorized shall be entered into by the Authority. The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment of all annual contributions contracted for pursuant to this section, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated in each fiscal year, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amounts necessary to provide for such payments.

"CAPITAL GRANTS IN ASSISTANCE OF LOW RENTALS

"SEC. 11. (a) As an alternative method of assistance to that provided in section 10, when any public housing agency so requests and demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Authority that such alternative method is better suited to the purpose of achieving and maintaining low rentals and to the other purposes of this Act, capital grants may be made to such agency for such purposes. The capital grants thus made for any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project shall be paid in connection with its development or acquisition, and shall be strictly limited to the amounts necessary, in the determination of the Authority, to assure its low-rent character: Provided, however, That no capital grant shall be made for the development of any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless the project includes the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwelling units provided by the project, except that such elimination may, in the discretion of the Authority, be deferred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to families of low income is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families.

"(b) Pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, the Authority may make a capital grant for any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project, which shall in no case exceed 25 per centum of its development or acquisition cost.

"(c) All payments of capital grants by the Authority pursuant to subsection (b) of this section shall be made out of any funds available to the Authority, except that its capital and its funds obtained through the issuance of obligations pursuant to section 20 (including repayments or other realizations of the principal of loans made out of such capital and funds) shall not be available for the payment of such capital grants.

"(d) The Authority is authorized, on or after the date of the enactment of this Act to make capital grants (pursuant to subsection (b) of this section) aggregating not more than $10,000,000, on or after July 1, 1938, to make additional capital grants aggregating not more than $10,000,000, and on or after July 1, 1939, to make additional capital grants aggregating not more than $10,000,000. Without further authorization from Congress, no capital grants beyond those herein authorized shall be made by the Authority.

"(e) To supplement any capital grant made by the Authority in connection with the development of any low-rent housing or slum-clearance project, the President may allocate to the Authority, from any funds available for the relief of unemployment, an additional capital grant to be expended for payment of labor used in such development: Provided, That such additional capital grant shall not exceed 15 per centum of the development cost of the low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project involved.

"(f) No capital grant pursuant to this section shall be made for any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project unless the public housing agency receiving such capital grant shall also receive, from the State, political subdivision thereof, or otherwise, a contribution for such project (in the form of cash, land, or the value, capitalized at the going Federal rate of interest, of community facilities or services for which a charge is usually made, or tax remissions or tax exemptions) in an amount not less than 20 per centum of its development or acquisition cost.

"DISPOSAL OF FEDERAL PROJECTS

"SEC. 12. (a) It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to provide for the orderly disposal of any low-rent-housing projects hereafter transferred to or acquired by the Authority through the sale or leasing of such projects as hereinafter provided; and, in order to continue the relief of Nation-wide unemployment and in order to avoid waste pending such sale or lease, to provide for the completion and temporary administration of such projects by the Authority.

"(b) As soon as practicable the Authority shall sell its Federal projects or divest itself of their management through leases.

"(c) The Authority may sell a Federal project only to a public housing agency. Any such sale shall be for a consideration, in whatever form may be satisfactory to the Authority, equal at least to the amount which the Authority determines to be the fair value of the project for housing purposes of a low-rent character (making such adjustment as the Authority deems advisable for any annual contributions which may hereafter be given hereunder in aid of the project), less such allowance for depreciation as the Authority shall fix. Such project shall then become eligible for loans pursuant to section 9, and either annual contributions pursuant to section 10 or a capital grant pursuant to section 11. Any obligation of the purchaser accepted by the Authority as part of the consideration for the sale of such project shall be deemed a loan pursuant to section 9.

"(d) The Authority may lease any Federal low-rent-housing project, in whole or in part, to a public housing agency. The lessee of any project, pursuant to this paragraph, shall assume and pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, and shall pay to the Authority such annual sums as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project. The provisions of section 321 of the Act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 40, sec. 303 b), shall not apply to any lease pursuant to this Act.

"(e) In the administration of any Federal low-rent-housing project pending sale or lease, the Authority shall fix the rentals at the amounts necessary to pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, plus such additional amounts as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project.

"GENERAL POWERS OF THE AUTHORITY

"SEC. 13. (a) The Authority may foreclose on any property or commence any action to protect or enforce any right conferred upon it by any law, contract, or other agreement. The Authority may bid for and purchase at any foreclosure by any party or at any other sale or otherwise acquire, and may administer, any low-rent-housing project which it previously owned or in connection with which it has made a loan pursuant to section 9, annual contributions pursuant to section 10, or capital grants pursuant to section 11.

"(b) The acquisition by the Authority of any real property pursuant to this Act shall not deprive any State or political subdivision thereof of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over such property, or impair the civil rights under the State or local law of the inhabitants on such property; and, insofar as any such jurisdiction may have been taken away or any such rights impaired by reason of the acquisition of any property transferred to the Authority pursuant to section 4 (d), such jurisdiction and such rights are hereby fully restored.

"(c) The Authority may enter into agreements to pay annual sums in lieu of taxes to any State or political subdivision thereof with respect to any real property owned by the Authority. The amount so paid for any year upon any such property shall not exceed the taxes that would be paid to the State or subdivision, as the case may be, upon such property if it were not exempt from taxation thereby.

"(d) The Authority may procure insurance against any loss in connection with its property and other assets (including mortgages), in such amounts, and from such insurers, as it deems desirable.

"(e) The Authority may sell or exchange at public or private sale, or lease, any real property (except low-rent-housing projects, the disposition of which is governed elsewhere in this Act) or personal property, and sell or exchange any securities or obligations, upon such terms as it may fix. The Authority may borrow on the security of any real or personal property owned by it, or on the security of the revenues to be derived therefrom, and may use the proceeds of such loans for the purposes of this Act.

"SEC. 14. Subject to the specific limitations or standards in this Act governing the terms of sales, rentals, leases, loans, contracts for annual contributions, contracts for capital grants, or other agreements, the Authority may, whenever it deems it necessary or desirable in the fulfillment of the purposes of this Act, consent to the modification, with respect to rate of interest, time of payment of any installment of principal or interest, security, amount of annual contribution, or any other term, of any contract or agreement of any kind to which the Authority is a party or which has been transferred to it pursuant to this Act. Any rule of law contrary to this provision shall be deemed inapplicable.

"SEC. 15. In order to insure that the low-rent character of housing projects will be preserved, and that the other purposes of this Act will be achieved, it is hereby provided that—

"(1) When a loan is made pursuant to section 9 for a low-rent-housing project the Authority may retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the condition (which shall be embodied in the loan agreement) providing for the maintenance of the low-rent character of the housing project involved or in the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, to increase the interest payable thereafter on the balance of said loan then held by the Authority to a rate not in excess of the going Federal rate (at the time of such breach or acquisition) plus 2 per centum per annum or to declare the unpaid principal on said loan due forthwith.

"(2) When a loan is made pursuant to section 9 for a slum-clearance project the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of the leasing or acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, to increase the interest payable thereafter on the balance of said loan then held by the Authority to a rate not in excess of the going Federal rate (at the time of such leasing or acquisition) plus 2 per centum per annum or to declare the unpaid principal on said loan due forthwith.

"(3) When a contract for annual contributions is made pursuant to section 10, the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the condition (which shall be embodied in such contract) providing for the maintenance of the low-rent character of the housing project involved, to reduce or terminate the annual contributions payable under such contract. In the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, such annual contributions shall terminate.

"(4) The Authority may also insert in any contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, lease, mortgage, or any other agreement or instrument made pursuant to this Act, such other covenants, conditions, or provisions as it may deem necessary in order to insure the low-rent character of the housing project involved: Provided, That any such contract for a substantial loan may contain a condition requiring the maintenance of an open space or playground in connection with the housing project involved if deemed necessary by the Authority for the safety or health of children.

"(5) No contract for any loan, annual contribution, or capital grant made pursuant to this Act shall be entered into by the Authority with respect to any project hereafter initiated costing more than $4,000 per family-dwelling-unit or more than $1,000 per room (excluding land, demolition, and non-dwelling facilities); except that in any city the population of which exceeds 500,000 any such contract may be entered into with respect to a project hereafter initiated costing not to exceed $5,000 per family-dwelling-unit or not to exceed $1,250 per room (excluding land, demolition, and non-dwelling facilities), if in the opinion of the Authority such higher family-dwelling-unit cost or cost per room is justified by reason of higher costs of labor and materials and other construction costs. With respect to housing projects on which construction is hereafter initiated, the Authority shall make loans, grants, and annual contributions only for such low-rent-housing projects as it finds are to be undertaken in such a manner (a) that such projects will not be of elaborate or expensive design or materials, and economy will be promoted both in construction and administration, and (b) that the average construction cost of the dwelling units (excluding land, demolition, and non-dwelling facilities) in any such project is not greater than the average construction cost of dwelling units currently produced by private enterprise, in the locality or metropolitan area concerned, under the legal building requirements applicable to the proposed site, and under labor standards not lower than those prescribed in this Act.

"SEC. 16. In order to protect labor standards—

"(1) The provisions of the Act of August 30, 1935, entitled 'An act to amend the Act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings' (49 Stat. 1011), and of the Act of August 24, 1935, entitled 'An Act requiring contracts for the construction, alteration, and repair of any public building or public work of the United States to be accompanied by a performance bond protecting the United States and by an additional bond for the protection of persons furnishing material and labor for the construction, alteration, or repair of said public buildings or public work' (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. II, title 40, secs. 270a to 270d, inclusive), shall apply to contracts in connection with the development or administration of Federal projects and the furnishing of materials and labor for such projects: Provided, That suits shall be brought in the name of the Authority and that the Authority shall itself perform the duties prescribed by section 3 (a) of the Act of August 30, 1935, and section 3 of the Act of August 24, 1935.

"(2) Any contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, or lease pursuant to this Act shall contain a provision requiring that the wages or fees prevailing in the locality, as determined or adopted (subsequent to a determination under applicable State or local law) by the Authority, shall be paid to all architects, technical engineers, draftsmen, technicians, laborers, and mechanics employed in the development or administration of the low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involved; and the Authority may require certification as to compliance with the provisions of this paragraph prior to making any payment under such contract.

"(3) The Act entitled 'An Act limiting the hours of daily services of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes', as amended (37 Stat. 137), shall apply to contracts of the Authority for work in connection with the development and administration of Federal projects.

"(4) The benefits of the Act entitled 'An Act to provide compensation for employees of United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes' (39 Stat. 742), shall extend to officers and employees of the Authority.

"(5) The provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 40, secs. 276b and 276c), shall apply to any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this Act.

"(6) Any contractor engaged on any project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this Act shall report monthly to the Secretary of Labor, and shall cause all subcontractors to report in like manner (within five days after the close of each calendar month, on forms to be furnished by the United States Department of Labor), as to the number of persons on their respective pay rolls on the particular project, the aggregate amount of such pay rolls, the total man-hours worked, and itemized expenditures for materials. Any such contractor shall furnish to the Department of Labor the names and addresses of all subcontractors on the work at the earliest date practicable.

"FINANCIAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 17. The Authority shall have a capital stock of $1,000,000, which shall be subscribed by the United States and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any available funds. Receipt for such payment shall be issued to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Authority and shall evidence the stock ownership of the United States of America.

"SEC. 18. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $26,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, of which $1,000,000 shall be available to pay the subscription to the capital stock of the Authority. Such sum, and all receipts and assets of the Authority, shall be available for the purposes of this Act until expended.

"SEC. 19. Any funds available under any Act of Congress for allocation for housing or slum clearance may, in the discretion of the President, be allocated to the Authority for the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 20. (a) The Authority is authorized to issue obligations, in the form of notes, bonds, or otherwise, which it may sell to obtain funds for the purposes of this Act. The Authority may issue such obligations in an amount not to exceed $100,000,000 on or after the date of enactment of this Act, an additional amount not to exceed $200,000,000 on or after July 1, 1938, and an additional amount not to exceed $200,000,000 on or after July 1, 1939. Such obligations shall be in such forms and denominations, mature within such periods not exceeding sixty years from date of issue, bear such rates of interest not exceeding 4 per centum per annum, be subject to such terms and conditions, and be issued in such manner and sold at such prices as may be prescribed by the Authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury

"(b) Such obligations shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

"(c) Such obligations shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed upon their face by the United States as to the payment of both interest and principal, and, in the event that the Authority shall be unable to make any such payment upon demand when due, payments shall be made to the holder by the Secretary of the Treasury with money hereby authorized to be appropriated for such purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. To the extent of such payment the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holder.

"(d) Such obligations shall be lawful investments and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or agency thereof. The Secretary of the Treasury is likewise authorized to purchase any such obligations, and for such purchases he may use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act, as amended, are extended to include any such purchases. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the obligations acquired by him pursuant to this section, and all redemptions, purchases, and sales by him of such obligations shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States.

"(e) Such obligations may be marketed for the Authority at its request by the Secretary of the Treasury, utilizing all the facilities of the Treasury Department now authorized by law for the marketing of obligations of the United States.

"SEC. 21. (a) Any money of the Authority not otherwise employed may be deposited, subject to check, with the Treasurer of the United States or in any Federal Reserve bank, or may be invested in obligations of the United States or used in the purchase or retirement or redemption of any obligations issued by the Authority.

"(b) The Federal Reserve banks are authorized and directed to act as depositories, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Authority in the general exercise of its powers, and the Authority may reimburse any such bank for its services in such manner as may be agreed upon.

"(c) The Authority may be employed as a financial agent of the Government. When designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Authority shall be a depository of public money, except receipts from customs.

"(d) Not more than 10 per centum of the funds provided for in this Act, either in the form of a loan, grant, or annual contribution, shall be expended within any one State.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 22. All general penal statutes relating to the larceny, embezzlement, or conversion or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys or property of the United States shall apply to the moneys and property of the Authority and to moneys and properties of the United States entrusted to the Authority.

"SEC. 23. Any person who, with intent to defraud the Authority or to deceive any director, officer, or employee thereof or any officer or employee of the United States, makes any false entry in any book of the Authority or makes any false report or statement to or for the Authority shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 24. Any person who shall receive any compensation, rebate, or reward, or shall enter into any conspiracy, collusion, or agreement, express or implied, with intent to defraud the Authority or with intent unlawfully to defeat its purposes, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 25. Any person who induces or influences the Authority to purchase or acquire any property or to enter into any contract and willfully fails to disclose any interest, legal or equitable, which he has in such property or in the property to which such contract relates, or any special benefit which he expects to receive as a result of such contract, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 26. No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words 'United States Housing Authority', or any combination of these four words, as the name, or part thereof, under which he or it shall do business. Any such use shall constitute a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

"SEC. 27. Wherever the application of the provisions of this Act conflicts with the application of the provisions of Public Numbered 837, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2025), Public Numbered 845, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2035), or any other Act of the United States dealing with housing or slum clearance, or any Executive order, regulation, or other order thereunder, the provisions of this Act shall prevail.

"SEC. 28. The President is hereby authorized to make available to The Alley Dwelling Authority, from any funds appropriated or otherwise provided to carry out the purposes of this Act, such sums as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934 (Public Numbered 307, Seventy-third Congress). Such sums shall be deposited in the Conversion of Inhabited Alleys Fund and thereafter shall remain immediately available for the purposes of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act.

"SEC. 29. Notwithstanding any other evidences of the intention of Congress, it is hereby declared to be the controlling intent of Congress that if any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this Act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 30. This Act may be cited as the 'United States Housing Act of 1937'."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the eradication of slums, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

FINDINGS AND DEFINITIONS

The Senate bill (sec. 1) contained a statement of findings as to housing conditions in rural and urban communities in the United States, and declared it to be the policy of the United States to remedy such conditions. The House amendment did not contain such findings but contained the declaration of policy with a clause expressly applying such policy to rural and urban communities. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the House amendment.

The Senate bill defined the term "low-rent housing" (sec. 2 (1)) to include in any project desirable as well as necessary appurtenances, and to include administrative, educational, recreational, commercial, and other lands, buildings, and facilities. The House amendment included only "necessary appurtenances" in the definition. The Senate provision limited the availability of the low-rent housing to families whose net income did not exceed five times the rental, and in cases of families with three or more minor dependents, six times the rental. The House amendment fixed these ratios at four and five times, respectively, and limited availability to families of citizens of the United States. The conference agreement adopts the definition of "low-rent housing" contained in the House amendment; adopts the ratios of five and six times the rental, respectively; and omits the language with reference to families of citizens.

The Senate bill included in the definition of "slum clearance" the adaptation of slum areas to public purposes, including parks, parking areas, or other recreational or community facilities (sec. 2 (4)). Such items were not included in the House amendment. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the House amendment.

The Senate bill (sec. 2 (7)) defined the term "demonstration project." The House amendment contained no corresponding definition. The conference agreement substitutes a definition of the term "Federal projects", as demonstration projects are omitted from the conference agreement. The term "Federal projects" is applied to projects owned or administered by the Authority.

The Senate bill (sec. 2 (8)) defined the term "acquisition cost" to mean the acquisition cost of a project to the Authority or to a housing agency. The House amendment (sec. 2 (7)) defined such cost to be the amount prudently required to be expended by a public housing agency in acquiring or developing a project. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the House amendment but omits the reference to cost of development, which is covered in a definition of the term "development" in section 2 (5).

The House amendment defined the term "average family-dwelling-unit cost" (sec. 2 (8)), which was used in section 15 (5) of the House amendment. The Senate bill did not use such term. The conference agreement omits the definition of the term, which is not used in the conference agreement.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

The Senate bill (sec. 3(b)) provided for vesting the powers of the Authority in a board of directors of three members. The House amendment provided for a single Administrator appointed for a term of five years by the President with the consent of the Senate, and for an unpaid advisory board of nine members representing various interests and geographical areas of the country. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the House amendment except those providing for an advisory board.

The Senate bill (sec. 4(a)) provided for the appointment and fixing of compensation of employees of the Authority subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, except that in the case of attorneys, officers, and experts, appointment might be made under regulations to be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission. The House amendment provided for the appointment and fixing of compensation of employees of the Authority without regard to such laws. The Senate bill (sec. 4(b)) provided for the confirmation by the Senate of employees with an annual salary of $4,000 or more, a provision which was not contained in the House amendment. The conference agreement provides that the compensation of all employees shall be subject to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, provides that all officers, experts and attorneys, and those employees receiving salaries of over $1,980 per annum, shall be exempted from the provisions of the civil-service laws, and provides that employees with an annual salary of more than $7,500 shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate.

The Senate bill (sec. 4 (c)) authorized the President to transfer housing or slum-clearance projects to the Authority. The House amendment limited such power of transfer to projects which have been constructed or are in process of construction on the date of enactment of the Act. The conference agreement retains the Senate provision with the House limitation thereon.

The Senate bill (sec. 6 (a)), in addition to auditing requirements, contained a provision requiring the showing of necessity for all expenses and expenditures by the Authority to the Bureau of the Budget and to the Congress. The House amendment contained no corresponding provision. The conference agreement omits the Senate provision.

The Senate bill (sec. 7 (a)) provided for research and experimentation by the Authority and the publication of housing information. No corresponding provision appeared in the House amendment. With respect to the annual report of the Authority to Congress contained in the Senate bill (sec. 7 (b)), the House amendment included in its requirements for a like report a statement of expenses and of annual contributions, in addition to the loans and grants covered in the Senate provision. The conference agreement omits the provision for research and experimentation, but permits the publication and dissemination of housing information by the Authority. The agreement also adopts the provisions relating to the annual report as modified in the House amendment.

The Senate bill (sec. 8 (b)) contained a provision relating to the review of administrative actions of the Authority. There was no corresponding provision in the House amendment. The conference agreement does not contain any provision relating to such review.

LOANS, ANNUAL CONTRIBUTIONS, AND CAPITAL GRANTS—LOCAL CONTRIBUTIONS

The Senate bill (sec. 9 (a)) provided that loans on any project should not exceed the development or acquisition cost, less capital grants and less loans by third parties.

The House amendment, in the case of loans in connection with capital grants under section 9, limited the amount of loans on any project to the development or acquisition cost less any capital grants, but in any event not to exceed 85 percent of such cost. The House amendment required that in the case of annual contributions under section 10 the total of loans on any project be limited to 85 percent of such cost. The House amendment also required that any loan by the Authority be secured by a first and a paramount lien against the project and its revenues. The conference agreement limits all loans to 90 percent of the cost of the projects and provides that the loans be secured in such manner as the Authority deems advisable.

In connection with the annual contributions provided for in the Senate bill (sec. 10 (a)) the House amendment conditioned the availability of the annual contribution by the Authority on local contributions by the State or political subdivision in which the project is situated constituting at least 25 percent of the annual contribution as provided for in the Senate bill (which fixes the maximum annual contribution at the going Federal interest rate plus 1 percent (sec. 10 (b)). The same section of the Senate bill required that any project providing for new dwellings must include the elimination or compulsory improvement of a substantially equal number of unsafe or insanitary dwellings in the locality or metropolitan area. The House amendment required such demolition or improvement to be provided for under arrangements satisfactory to the Authority, with power in the Authority to defer elimination of old housing if there is an acute shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to low-income families. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the House amendment requiring local contributions to make up a part of the annual contribution provided for in the Senate bill, except that the contribution is fixed at 20 percent. The agreement requires the elimination or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings to be included in the project for new dwellings, and adopts the provisions of the House amendment permitting such elimination or improvement to be deferred in case of an acute shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing for low-income families.

The House amendment added a proviso to section 10 (b) of the Senate bill to require that the annual contributions be used first to apply for the payment of interest or principal on loans due the Authority from the public-housing agency. The House amendment (sec. 10 (c)) provided for an examination of the status of low-rent-housing projects at the end of the first 10 years of the contract for annual contributions and each 5 years thereafter, instead of 20 years and 10 years, respectively, as provided in the Senate bill. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of these House amendments.

In connection with capital grants in assistance of low rentals, the Senate provision (sec. 11 (a)) providing for the elimination or compulsory improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings as part of a project involving the construction of new dwellings was modified by the House amendment (sec. 11 (a)) in the same manner as in the case of the provision relating to annual contributions (sec. 10 (a)). The Senate requirement for local contributions in case of capital grants (sec. 11 (f)) was modified by the House amendment to permit such contributions in the form of community facilities or services only if of the kind for which a charge is usually made, and to include tax exemptions with tax remissions, and to increase the contribution from 20 percent to 25 percent of the development or acquisition cost of the project. The conference agreement requires the elimination or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings as part of a project, and adopts the provision of the House amendment permitting the deferment of such elimination or improvement under the same conditions as in the conference agreement under section 10 (a). The agreement fixes the amount of the local contributions in connection with capital grants at 20 percent of the development or acquisition cost.

The Senate bill contained no provisions for the disposal of Federal projects for low-rent housing or slum clearance, and the House amendment (sec. 12) made provision for the disposal of projects transferred to or acquired by the Authority. Such disposal might be by sale to a public housing agency at the fair value of the project for housing purposes of a low-rent character, or by lease to a public housing agency, which lessee must assume management, operation, and maintenance costs. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of section 12 of the House amendment.

GENERAL POWERS OF THE AUTHORITY

The Senate bill (sec. 12 (a)) contained provisions for the acquiring of real or personal property by purchase, eminent domain, donation, or otherwise, a provision which was not included in the House amendment. The House amendment did not contain any provision corresponding to the Senate provision (sec. 12 (f)) permitting the Authority to subordinate its securities or obligations to those which may be sold by it. The conference agreement does not include the provisions of the Senate bill with respect to such acquisition of property or the subordination of securities.

STANDARDS FOR PROJECTS

The Senate bill (sec. 14) contained various standards relating to the making of loans, annual contributions, and capital grants, which were not included in the House amendment. The conference agreement does not include these provisions.

The Senate bill (sec. 15 (4)) contained a provision for the maintenance of playground facilities in connection with housing projects which was not included in the House amendment. The conference agreement provides that any contract for a substantial loan may contain a condition requiring the maintenance of an open space or playground in connection with a housing project when deemed necessary by the Authority for the safety or health of children.

The Senate bill (sec. 15 (5)) contained a limitation on the cost of dwelling units in any project limiting the cost to $4,000 per family unit, or $1,000 per room, exclusive of the cost of land and the cost of renovating old buildings, less value of salvage. The House amendment prescribed limitations requiring that the projects not be of elaborate or expensive design or materials and that economy be promoted both in construction and administration, and that the construction costs of dwelling units be not greater than the average construction costs of units currently produced by private enterprise in the locality or metropolitan area concerned, and that the average family-dwelling-unit cost shall not exceed $5,000. The conference agreement limits construction costs in projects to $4,000 per family-dwelling unit and $1,000 per room (excluding land, demolition, and nondwelling facilities), except that in any city the population of which exceeds 500,000, if in the opinion of the Authority a higher dwelling-unit cost or cost per room is justified by reason of higher costs of labor or materials, or other construction costs, the per family-dwelling-unit cost is limited to $5,000 and the per-room cost is limited to $1,250. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the House amendment relating to design, materials, economy in construction and administration, and the provision limiting the dwelling-unit cost to the average construction cost of units produced by private enterprise in the same locality or metropolitan area.

FINANCIAL PROVISIONS

The Senate bill (sec. 20 (a)) provided for an aggregate bond issue by the Authority totaling $700,000,000. The House amendment fixed the aggregate at $500,000,000. The conference agreement adopts the aggregate amount fixed in the House amendment.

The Senate bill (sec. 21 (d)) provided that not more than 20 percent of the funds provided for in the act for loans, grants, or contributions should be expended within any one State. The House amendment substitutes 10 percent in lieu of 20 percent. The conference agreement adopts the figure fixed in the House amendment.

The House amendment contained an additional section (sec. 28) providing specifically for the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Authority. The Senate bill contained no similar provision. The conference agreement adopts the provision of the House amendment.

HENRY B. STEAGALL,
T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
M. K. REILLY,
JESSE P. WOLCOTT,
HAMILTON FISH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill provided for a board consisting of an administrator and two assistants, the administration to be under the board and subject to the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The House bill provided for an administrator under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior and an advisory board of nine members to serve without compensation except expenses incurred in attending meetings and remuneration for the time spent in conference. The conference report provides for an administrator under supervision of the Secretary of the Interior and eliminates the provision for an advisory board.

The Senate bill provided the sum of $700,000,000 for the purpose of making loans by the Federal Housing Authority. Under the House bill this amount was reduced to $500,000,000, and the House provision was adopted.

The Senate bill provided that loans on any project should not exceed the development or acquisition cost, less capital grants and less loans by third parties.

The House amendment, in the case of loans in connection with capital grants, limited the amount of loans to the development or acquisition cost less any capital grants, but in any event not to exceed 85 percent of such cost. The House amendment required that in the case of annual contributions under section 10 the total of loans on any project be limited to 85 percent of such cost. The conference agreement limits all loans to 90 percent of the cost of the projects. In connection with annual contributions the House amendment required local contributions at least 25 percent of the annual contributions. The conference agreement fixes the local contribution at 20 percent. In the case of local contributions in connection with capital grants the Senate had fixed a figure of 5 percent, the House amendment fixed it at 25 percent, and the conference agreement makes it 20 percent.

The conference report followed the language of the Senate bill in defining low-rent housing and adopts, in respect of the income of and the rent payable by the tenant, the ratio of 5 to 1 and 6 to 1 the standard by which the benefits of rental privileges are to be extended. The House language provided that the salary should not be more than four times the rental fixed, in one instance, and five times in the other. The Senate bill provided five and six times the rental fixed. The conference report adopts the Senate amendment, for the reason that under the Senate amendment a smaller percentage of salary is required for the payment of rent, the intent being to extend the benefits, as far as may be done, to those most in need.

In the Senate bill the cost of construction of a family unit was limited to $4,000 and to $1,000 a room. The House bill provided for limitation of $5,000 per family unit as a maximum and required that the construction of projects could not exceed the cost of similar projects undertaken by private enterprise in the particular communities to be served.

The conference report provides a general limit of $4,000, as provided in the Senate bill, and retains the other restrictions and limitations imposed in the House bill. A proviso is added that permits projects for dwelling units to cost as much as $5,000 in cities where the population exceeds 500,000. In the case of the $4,000 limitation a room-cost limit of $1,000 is provided, and in the case where construction of family units may reach $5,000 in cities of over 500,000 population a room limitation of $1,250 is provided.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Is there any leeway allowed in the bill for a city with a population, such as Omaha, Nebr., for instance, of 225,000 for an extension or an increase in the amount per room, if it becomes necessary?

Mr. STEAGALL. No. The limit is $4,000 a family unit and $1,000 a room, except in cities of above 500,000 population, where the room limit is $1,250 and the unit limit is $5,000.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Did the committee arrive at this 500,000 figure with reference to any data which assisted it, or was it an arbitrary alinement of some kind?

Mr. STEAGALL. There were all kinds of figures and suggestions. Of course, in conference we were acting within the limits of the provisions of the two measures as passed by the House and the Senate. This is a compromise worked out in conference, and it seems to me to be about the best arrangement that has been suggested.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. If it develops in actual practice that it does not work out satisfactorily as far as the arbitrary limitation is concerned, it can be amended subsequently?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. As has been stated over and over, this bill is simply a beginning of a program, if we are to go forward toward anything approaching the fulfillment of the desires of those who are responsible for this legislation.

Under the provisions of the Senate bill no State could receive more than one-fifth of the funds. The House changed the figure to one-tenth of the total amount, and the House provision was adopted in conference.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee whether or not any provision was made for the benefits of this beneficient measure to be extended to the rural communities, by which I mean communities of 25,000 or less?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course. The gentleman invites a repetition of discussion which took place on the passage of the bill in the House. As far as I know, this inquiry does not involve any difference between the House bill and the Senate bill. However, I may say to the gentleman that this bill contemplates a housing program and a slum-clearance program, and there is no limitation in the bill in respect of the area to be benefited, rural or urban. On the contrary, under the specific language of the bill, it is made applicable to both rural and urban communities. It applies to communities far below 25,000 population, as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi. The conferees made no change in this provision of the bill.

Mr. COLMER. As a practical matter, will the smaller communities come under this bill, in the opinion of the distinguished chairman of the committee?

Mr. STEAGALL. Undoubtedly they will if this law is administered in accordance with its letter and with its purpose, as we have a right to assume it will be.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Is there retained in the bill the provision that the cost per unit shall be commensurate with the cost of building in the locality where the work is being undertaken?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; all this language is in the bill, plus the limitation embodied in the Senate bill of $4,000 with respect to projects in cities of less than 500,000 population, with the other provisions to which I have referred.

Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. I know what the gentleman wants me to talk about. I am coming to that right now.

Mr. MAY. Probably the chairman is right, but what I have in mind is that, as I understand, this bill sets up a national housing authority with power and authority to deal with a State housing authority or other local housing authorities.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is correct; States, counties, and other subdivisions.

Mr. MAY. Suppose the State has no housing authority, or the county has no housing authority, would a small town which happened to have a slum area be able to establish a housing authority?

Mr. STEAGALL. If it has a municipal-housing authority dealing with that question, it comes under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Is the provision which the House inserted in the bill limiting the benefits of this act to American citizens retained in the conference report?

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman that this matter was not regarded as of serious importance by some members of the conference, and it was not considered necessary to include such a provision in the bill. For this reason, the provision in the House bill is not embodied in the conference report.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. May I say to the distinguished chairman of the committee that some of us regard it of very great importance that American citizens should not be taxed for the benefit of uninvited guests who owe no allegiance to our flag or to our Government.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, it is not expected that any such thing as that would happen under the administration of this bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I hope not; but under the conference report it can still happen. Under the provision which the House voted to insert in the bill, and which the conferees agreed to eliminate, it could not happen.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Following up the point discussed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] in regard to a municipality establishing a housing authority to deal with the National Housing Administration, suppose there is a State that has not a municipal housing authority, a county housing authority, or a State housing authority; would it then be necessary for the State legislature to set up such authorities?

Mr. STEAGALL. No. A municipality or the county commissioners, can set up a housing authority without the necessity for the steps suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I was not able to hear the question of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS], but I believe he was asking with regard to my amendment in reference to the qualification of citizenship.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; that is what the gentleman mentioned.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Did the chairman state this amendment was eliminated in conference?

Mr. STEAGALL. It was.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am very sorry to hear that, because it seems to me it is difficulty to justify the cost of these so-called low-cost housing projects to the country. How can you say to people who themselves cannot live in houses as good as these that they shall contribute to the cost of building houses for the benefit of people who are not citizens of the United States?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, there is no such provision in the bill that the benefits shall apply to those who are not citizens of the United States.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes; but they may be so applied.

Mr. STEAGALL. As far as I am concerned, I do not think we need fear that anything of that kind will happen.

Mr. Speaker, the House upon a roll call expressed its desire with reference to the provisions of the two bills dealing with the matter of civil-service requirements to be applied to the personnel to be employed in carrying out this work.

The Senate bill required the application of civil-service and classification rules to all employees except attorneys and officials and experts, but with a provision that the employment of experts and officials should be under civil-service regulations. These requirements were not incorporated in the House bill. The conference report provides that civil-service rules shall be applied to all employees drawing up to and including $1,980, and all employees above $1,980 are exempt from civil-service requirements, but the Classification Act is made applicable to all employees.

I call attention to the fact that under the Classification Act only three grades would be embraced within the civil-service requirements provided in the conference report.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. In just a moment.

There are 16 grades established under the Classification Act. This organization is peculiarly one that will call for a large percentage of experts, specially trained men, engineers, men experienced in real-estate matters, and all the things that go to make up the necessary qualifications for service in the administration of this law. I dare say we could not find a parallel in any other act passed in recent times as to the special types of personnel required. The conferees agreed to put under civil-service rules all employees embraced in the first three classes of the Classification Act. The other 13 classes under the Classification Act are excluded from the operations of civil-service rules.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. In just a moment. I want the House to understand the provision to which I am about to call attention, because it was not discussed when the bill was under consideration in the House, and I think it very important in connection with the action taken in connection with civil-service provisions.

Under the Senate bill all employees whose compensation amounts to $4,000 would be made subject to confirmation by the Senate. That provision has been incorporated in one or two other recent acts of the Congress, as I remember. I do not care to go into a discussion of that, but I do want to call the attention of the House to the provision of the Senate bill, and I wish to say to the House that, under the provisions of the conference report, no employee under this organization will be subject to confirmation by the Senate unless his salary exceeds $7,500. The conferees on the part of the House regard the elimination of the original provisions of the Senate bill of such importance as that it must meet the unqualified approval of the membership of the House.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Could the gentleman tell us about what percentage of the employees under this act will not be under the direct supervision and control and appointment of the Senate under the conference report you have agreed to, that all except the first three classifications will be under Senate jurisdiction?

Mr. STEAGALL. My answer to that would be, possibly, a few engineering experts and a few attorneys, but the number would be infinitesimally small.

Mr. McFARLANE. Under this proposition that the first three classifications will be under civil service and all others will be out from under, what percentage of the employees under this bill will be under civil service and what percentage will not be under civil service?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no way to give those figures. As I have suggested, this is an organization that peculiarly demands a large percentage of employees of the type that would not be embraced within the $1,980 limitation or the first three classes embraced in the Classification Act, but there are only three classes of employees under the Classification Act that will be subject to civil service, and the Classification Act embraces 16 classes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. While I am not satisfied with the civil-service provisions, nevertheless I want to ask the gentleman, is it not a fact that when we vote on this conference report it is a question of take it or leave it?

Mr. McFARLANE. Not necessarily.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am addressing the chairman of the committee. If we vote down this conference report, I insist it must go back to the Senate, the conferees must meet again, and the rules of the House provide that the report must lay over a day.

Mr. COLLINS. No.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the chairman who has the floor yield to me to submit a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me with respect to a conflicting statement that has been made here?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama has yielded to me to submit a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know if this conference report is voted down, if it will not then be necessary to go back to the Senate and have the conferees meet again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Therefore I am sure if we vote the conference report down we are endangering the entire bill, and while I am not satisfied with the bill, because it does not entirely meet my viewpoint, I am going to vote for the conference report, as it is the best we can possibly get at this time.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). The Chair has not yet answered the parliamentary inquiry submitted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. Of course, if the conference report is voted down, the bill will have to go back to conference, and if another report is agreed upon, unless it is brought up by unanimous consent, it would have to lay over for a day and be considered the day following.

The gentleman from Alabama has used 25 minutes.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield for a question.

Mr. WALTER. I rather imagine that the managers on the part of the Senate are very strongly in favor of this provision. When the gentleman compared this bill with the social security legislation I wondered what his experience had been with that organization when he endeavored to place people he knows are infinitely better qualified than the people selected arbitrarily by this group downtown, and I am wondering now whether he wants a repetition of the things that we have experienced under that law.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I think the position of the gentleman to whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania is addressing his inquiry is very well understood by the House.

I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White].

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think we are all inclined to stretch a point because this bill is supposed to deal with slum dwellings. When the original bill was under consideration in the House I strongly felt the provision for civil service should be included in it. I felt there should be specific limitation imposed upon the cost of units, and of rooms, and also felt that there should be provision in the bill to provide a check on expenditures, by the Comptroller General. Now, by the inclusion of the civil-service provisions as just outlined by the chairman of the committee, this housing bill is taken out of the spoils system to a very large degree, and by the change of the conference report in making the limitations on the cost per room and cost per unit more specific I think it has brought the bill a great deal closer to the target of low incomes and low rentals. In view of these changes and with a hope that further corrections will be made at the next session of Congress, I think many of us who did not feel justified in favoring the bill in the form originally presented can now be grateful for the work accomplished by the conference committee and be prepared to support the bill as submitted by the conferees.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman stated that the conferees have taken the spoils system out of this bill. What the gentleman means is that it has left only two spoilsmen to handle it, and that is another body, and the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I think they put civil-service limitations upon the bill. That constitutes the merit system and I think that ought to be extended from one end of the Government to the other.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, when I first came to Congress I was told that all major legislation was a matter of compromise. I did not know quite what that meant until I took part in some conferences with the Senate on legislation. I did not fully realize what it meant until the conference on this bill when, after spending 11½ hours yesterday giving and taking, adding and subtracting, sparring for advantage back and forth, we finally succeeded in coming to an agreement on what I consider to be a better bill than that which the Senate passed or that which the House passed. We have clarified many points in controversy in both the House and Senate bills.

Briefly, I should like to tell the House how the bill will operate if the conference report is adopted. First, we set up an administrator within the Interior Department. The administrator is a body corporate. That might seem unusual, but there are precedents for it in our Federal system whereby an individual becomes, by act of Congress, a body corporate. We provide that the personnel of this new bureau—because it is a new bureau within the Department of the Interior—shall be chosen partly under the civil service and partly outside of the civil service. As the chairman of the committee has stated, all employees within the classifications who receive an annual salary less than $1,980 per year, come within the civil-service laws, and those employees who receive over $1,980 per year are patronage employees, and are appointed without regard to the civil-service laws, but their salaries are determined by the Classification Act. That is a decided improvement on the House bill because as the House passed the bill there was no limitation upon the salary which could be paid any employee. A clerk in the Department could, within the discretion of the administrator, be paid a salary of $50,000 a year. There was no limitation upon it. Employees receiving a salary of over $7,500 per year must be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows that the House is divided upon the question of personnel. Part of the House is in favor of no civil-service provision, and another part of the House is in favor of a civil-service provision.

A moment ago I made a statement in which I said that if those who insisted on eliminating the provisions, as they now are, voted down the conference report, it naturally must go back to conference. I further stated that when the next report was made it would have to lie over for a day. I have confirmed that by talking to the Parliamentarian. The only way this conference report can be called up again, in the event this one is voted down, would be for the Senate to agree to the resolution for adjournment. Prior to the time the resolution for adjournment is agreed to by the Senate, there is absolutely no way that this conference report could be called up, because under the rules of the House it must lie over for a day.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Therefore, despite my feelings in the matter, I am going to set those aside, because I want to see some legislation passed, and vote for the conference report. Those who want a housing bill should do likewise.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Nobody has given any more in this conference report on civil service than I have by accepting the language which we agreed upon in conference. If you will recall, I stood here and got several headaches trying to convince this House that we should provide that all employees come under the civil service. Because I wanted to see a housing program started, and realizing that we were going to have no housing bill unless we accepted the provisions which we have written into this conference report, I then decided I should go along with the conference report and the agreement which we entered into concerning the civil service. If I, a Republican, am willing to modify my stand on this deep-seated principle that I have concerning this question, then surely you Democrats, who are going to get at least some of the "gravy" and who want a housing bill, should at least do likewise. I want you to meet me half way on this, because I am telling you in all sincerity that unless we do accept this provision, and I say it without any fear of successful contradiction, we are not going to have a housing bill at this session of Congress. So to vote down this conference report because of some misguided convictions which you may have with reference to the civil service means the death of the housing bill. Is it more important that we have a housing bill or is it more important that you should have patronage? I say at the present time it is more important that we vote for this conference report and give the administration an opportunity to evolve a sound housing program.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. As one who supported the civil-service provisions of the bill, and as one who wants a housing bill at this session of Congress, I can see where it is easy for a Member to compromise his position, no matter whether he stands for the civil-service or the patronage system. In the provisions that you bring to us in the conference report, it is very easy for the Civil Service Commission to give this new department an abundance of well-qualified applicants for the minor positions, and it will be very easy for those in charge of the organization of this new set-up, and because of the very nature of it, it being rather a new undertaking on the part of the Government, to secure outside of the civil-service personnel for those key positions that will fall in what we may call the expert assignments. In other words, the rank and file will be taken from the civil service, and the higher positions may be drawn from the industry that has produced experienced personnel in housing matters.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. McMILLAN. Following the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], the question occurs to me what is going to be the solution of your problem with regard to these civil-service employees after they have, by the efficiency of their ratings, been promoted to a point beyond the $1,980 salary. In other words, it seems to me that unless some provision is made here, the very civil-service employee who, by his rating and his efficiency, is promoted will be penalized once he is beyond that rate of $1,980. That is the question I would like to hear the gentleman say something about.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We gave some consideration to that. This is a compromise. We must realize that none of these employees will be advanced beyond that grade during the next year, and so Congress being in session next January, and undoubtedly called upon to practically rewrite this bill in the light of experience between now and then, may give consideration to just that question. On the other hand, I may say to the gentleman it is my understanding that the majority side has in mind bringing in a reorganization bill at the next session of Congress, which would blanket all of these employees into the civil service and make them amenable to the Classification Act.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think that is a fundamental question involved in this problem.

Mr. MEAD. I will say the gentleman is correct in his statement. The contemplated reorganization bill will bring every permanent agency under the classified civil service.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, this conference report is nothing but a cutthroat report which would require the House to do a thing that the House is clearly opposed to. If the conferees had wanted to treat this House fairly, they should have come in here with a favorable report on the question that the House had so decidedly voted upon. Not 10 percent of all the Members on the Democratic side voted against the amendment eliminating the civil-service feature, yet the conferees would make us vote this report up or down when they know that it is not fair. It has been my experience in the past, especially under Republican administrations, that except where they tried to ram something down the throats of the Members, they stood by the position of the House when the House had decided so overwhelmingly upon a proposition; they would bring the matter back to the House for decision.

The only Members who have today defended the conference report have been those who were wild on the theory of civil service, as you know from their record here. They are trying to get us to do a thing that they know we do not want to do. They tell us that one objection can stop it. No one is going to object to this report being taken up under unanimous consent, and if they did, it could be called up under a suspension of the rules, for any rule can be suspended by a two-thirds vote of the House; and every one of the Members, even if they are opposed to this civil-service provision, will vote to suspend the rules.

It is just a question of trying to ram it down our throats. The thing to do is to have another conference, for the conferees to bring back another report. If we stand by our guns and ask for a further conference, we know they will recede. The conferees have done nothing to carry out the will of this House, not a thing in the world, notwithstanding the overwhelming majority of the Members who voted on the proposition. It is an insult to 95 percent of the Democrats on this side of the House. The report ought to be voted down.

Who do they say was exempted? They exempted lawyers; they are experts and always are exempted. They exempted architects and engineers, and they are always exempted, and it was intended that they should be exempted. All of those positions are going to go to the Senate. There will not be a Representative get a single job, not one; and I do not expect any of them anyway, but I want a fair square deal, especially in regard to the matter about which the House has expressed itself so decisively.

Every Member of the House knows that one objection will not stop consideration of the conference report despite what is said by these civil-service enthusiasts, such as the gentleman from Missouri, the gentleman from Buffalo, N. Y., who come in here and try to put up a bugaboo and say that one objection can stop it. They know, the Speaker knows, and the Parliamentarian knows that that is not true. The rules can be suspended and there is not a question of doubt in the world, regardless of what their report might be when they bring it back, that all of us will allow them to bring it up under unanimous consent. Not only that, but the deficiency appropriation bill is in the same condition now that this bill will be if it goes back to another conference.

If we want to sacrifice our rights, if we want to let a little minority control this House and ram down our throats something that we are opposed to, if we want to set a precedent of that kind, we can; and they will continue to do such things in the future. Send it back to conference; vote against it. We who take this position are not opposed to civil service in the permanent departments and want to do no harm to the real merit system. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, in one particular, if not in any other, this conference report is grossly unfair to the smaller municipalities, as I shall attempt to demonstrate. First, if the Members will excuse a personal reference to bring out a point, I had the honor to be the mayor of my city, Stamford, Conn., 2 years ago when the Federal Government placed there at the earnest solicitation of Democrats and Republicans alike a $980,000 slum-clearance project, a so-called demonstration low-cost housing project; and right over my desk as mayor of the city were assembled the staff of engineers, of architects, and all of the staff that, put together, built that project. The project is eminently successful. It is supported today by everybody in the community. We have 800 family applications for 146 family units.

What did that cost per room in a city of something less than 50,000 people? It cost $1,601 per room. What did the project cost in Oklahoma City? One thousand five hundred and sixty-three dollars per room. What did the Dallas, Tex., project cost per room? One thousand six hundred and fifteen dollars. What did the Atlantic City, N. J., project cost per room? One thousand three hundred and seventy-one dollars. And these costs do not include the cost of land. These are the smaller cities, cities under 500,000 population. According to this bill, therefore, you would limit the cost per room for cities under 500,000 population to $1,000 per room. This would rule out of consideration, I believe, speaking as a past chief executive of a city and speaking from the record, almost every city in the United States under 500,000. Understand that the cost of land is not included in this amendment. It relates to the cost of construction of the room only. In some instances, in the smaller cities, the cost of construction is even higher than it is in the larger cities because the smaller cities are farther removed from the source of supply of raw material thereby increasing transportation charges. Invariably the prevailing rates of wages are the same in smaller as in our larger centers of population.

I wish I had time to refer to the building costs per room on every project in the United States today, but I have not. I put them in the Appendix of the RECORD, pages 2168–2169. To aid you in considering this matter I will include these figures again by appending them herewith.

Mr. Speaker, in closing may I say that I hope we get a housing bill out of this session of Congress. I would like to have this bill recommitted to the conference committee to change this limitation of $1,000 per room as affecting the smaller cities, because it is unfair; but if the bill is going to fail of passage at this session because of recommitment then I say pass the bill, but let us change it, let us improve it, at the next session of Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKEOUGH].

Mr. MCKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I have sat with the House Committee on Banking and Currency during every session that hearings were held in connection with the proposed so-called public-housing bill. I know every member of that committee with great devotion, consistent performance, and attendance at the hearings attempted very seriously to bring out of their study and deliberations such amendments to the Senate bill as would make for as nearly a perfect initiation of low-cost housing from a national viewpoint as was possible. I feel that those who now criticize the efforts of that committee either in its deliberations, in its committee room, or on the part of those who are the conferees of the House, are manifestly unfair. I am quite sure they do not intend to be, but we who have so ceaselessly devoted our efforts to bringing forth a public-housing bill most earnestly ask the Members of this body to join with those who are the conferees of the House and the Senate and at least assure the initiation now of a housing program by the adoption of this initial legislation. There is nothing in this bill or the conference report that would prohibit those amendments that are sought by those who criticize the action of the conferees securing attention in the next regular session of the Congress.

I want to point out to those who are now objecting that this program on the part of those who sponsored it indicates it is merely an initial effort. The limitations in this bill provide only for 3 years. There is nothing that would stop this Congress or any other Congress when it convened in session to make such amendments, such adjustments, and refinements in the initial effort as the experience of the housing authorities might suggest.

I am sure the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS], who has just spoken and who called attention to the fact that the $4,000 limit might handicap cities of less than 500,000 population, will fully realize that we of the cities with the larger populations who happen to be members of the House Banking and Currency Committee, did everything we possibly could to convince the full membership that the amendment adopted in the Senate limiting it to $4,000 would destroy the program in its initiation.

I recall that when this bill was before the House for consideration, my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] called specific attention to the fact that if the $5,000 limit were reduced the bill would be destroyed, and it might just as well be voted down. Let us be fair about the situation. We who have fought for an hour and wage bill in this House have been denied even the opportunity of considering it because a minority of the Democratic membership in conjunction with the Republican members of the rules committee have denied a vote to the membership of the House of Representatives on that important measure.

I go home from this session confident that when a soberness reaches those who have denied us a vote, that when we reconvene, we will have a vote on the wages and hours bill, and I venture the prophecy that is all that will be necessary, because when a vote is taken on the wage and hour measure it will be enacted into law, as it should be. I say to those who complain about the work of the conferees on this housing bill that we will have a session again, either a special or regular session, and if the sincerity that is indicated by the heat of the remarks is then present, we will have an opportunity to amend the bill if necessary to make it a better law.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, may I say finally that the House gained 13 classes under the Civil Service Classification Act and yielded as to three classes in order that we might bring in a conference report to the House at a time when we believed the House desired the report in order to carry out the program so much wished by its Members.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much interested in this bill. It does not entirely satisfy me yet. I think it is worse than it was as we passed it insofar as the smaller cities are concerned, and the meager way they have been treated.

Of course, as to the civil-service provision, neither side has won. The amendment is a compromise.

I appreciate the sincerity with which both sides have approached the civil-service question. I have no criticism of them in that respect. In fact I sympathize with those gentlemen who complain of the way in which alleged civil service or the so-called merit system is administered.

But we face a practical situation here. In my opinion we will get a housing bill right now or we will not get one. If this conference report is voted down, to restate what has been said before, the bill goes back to conference, and a new conference report must come back if agreed upon. Under the rules that report must lie over for 1 day, unless the adjournment sine die resolution is agreed to in the meantime. I understand the other body does not intend to adopt that adjournment resolution until all these matters are disposed of. I do not follow the suggestion of bringing up the second conference report under suspension of the rules.

Mr. FULLER. You can do it, though.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course it could be done, but I do not follow the practicability of the suggestion. If there is any chance of defeating the conference report now and cause it to be sent back to conference by a majority vote, if a second conference report were brought back in here again with a substantially similar civil-service provision, there would be required only a one-third vote to block the adoption of the report and defeat the bill. That suggestion, in my opinion, therefore, should not be followed.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report should be voted up now. It is the best bill we can get at the present. It does not satisfy all of the various elements who are interested in the bill or opposed to it or those concerned with the civil-service provisions. At the close of every session of Congress we are faced with this practical situation and often in several instances. If we are going to have a "housing bill", then we should have one, and now. If we are going to have a "housing bill", the only way to get one is to vote for this conference report, and I sincerely hope the House will so proceed.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

HIGH-COST HOUSING

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as it passed the House was opposed by me. The Senate bill provided for a total expense of $4,000 in building a house or an apartment. This was increased in the House to $5,000, not including the land, grading, and so forth, which may bring the expense up to around $8,000 per unit. The bill is called the low-cost housing bill, but to my mind it should be termed the high-cost housing bill.

Perhaps not a quarter of the people of our Nation are housed in structures costing five to eight thousand dollars per unit, and comfortable houses can be constructed at a very much less cost. Of course, if we are to assume that the construction under this act will be along the line that Government construction has been for the last few years we know it will be expensive. Under Tugwellism it is reported that houses for the underprivileged have been constructed at a cost of sixteen to twenty thousand dollars per unit, and these houses are for the underpaid individuals.

It is obvious that no one with a small income can afford to live in a house which costs from eight to twenty thousand dollars, nor is it desirable or necessary to do so. This legislation is going at the whole subject back end to. For example, this legislation will apply to housing only in our largest cities. For instance, New York City has a population of some 7,000,000 people, while the whole State has a population of only 13,000,000. There is no rhyme nor reason for constructing more apartments in New York City to house still more people when we do not have employment for those who are already there. It just is not good business. If it is desirable, as I believe it is, to furnish quarters for people who are in such circumstances that they cannot furnish homes for themselves, then we should buy up tracts of good land outside the cities. Land can be had perhaps for $100 an acre, and provide each home scattered throughout the length and breadth of our Nation with at least 1 acre, or more, of land and construct on that land a four- or five-room bungalow which can be built for not more than $1,000. Then these persons will have some chance of paying for and owning their own home. They can raise a good share of their living on an acre or two of land, keep some hens, a pig, some goats, or a cow, and be almost independent. While cooped up in a small apartment in the city, and in many instances on relief, it will never be possible for them to own a home of their own.

Homes that have been constructed under the Tugwell regime, as I have said before, run from eight to twenty thousand dollars per unit and the rent alone on a place of this kind is more than any of the workers can afford. I should like to support legislation which would give real relief to those receiving modest salaries, or no salary, to give them a chance to own a home of their own. But this legislation will do very little, if any, good and will tend to make a bad matter worse by concentrating more people in our large cities when there are already too many there. On the other hand, out in the wide-open spaces where we have sunshine, pure water, and air there will be ample ground for children to play in the open and the people can live where they can take some comfort out of life.

It may be necessary to relocate some of our industries so that these people can have employment, but to keep congregating more people in the centers where homes have to be run way up in the air instead of building two-story homes will never tend to better living conditions. In the South I understand some manufacturing concerns insist that all of their employees live out on the land and will not take city dwellers to do the work. I am also told that in Switzerland each worker in the factories must live out on the land, and as a result many small farms are owned by the workers. So when a pinch comes and the factory closes down they still have their land to support them. We must learn to advance conditions of this kind, be progressive, and looking forward to decentralizing our people, get back to the land where the people can live in contentment and plenty, and stop this herding millions of people on some small point of land by constructing skyscrapers.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY and Mr. COLLINS)—ayes 128, nays 48.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-seven Members are present, a quorum.

So the conference report was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the request of the gentleman comes too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's request comes too late. The conference report had already been agreed to and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SIGNING OF ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 26

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That notwithstanding the adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign any enrolled bills or joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and which have been examined by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of each House and found truly enrolled.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONS AND COMMITTEES

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress the Speaker be authorized to appoint commissions and committees authorized by law or by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CONSERVATION, PRODUCTION, EXPLOITATION, AND SALE OF HELIUM GAS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1567) authorizing the conservation, production, exploitation, and sale of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense and to the development of commercial aeronautics, authorizing the acquisition, by purchase or otherwise, by the United States of properties for the production of helium gas, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAY and Mr. HARLAN) there were—ayes 85, noes 57.

Mr. O'MALLEY and Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey objected to the vote on the ground there was not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. O'MALLEY and Mr. ELLENBOGEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1567, with Mr. NICHOLS in the chair.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, my statement on this bill will be very brief. I hope the Members will give me their attention so I may eliminate as much as possible of the misunderstanding which appears to exist here.

Under existing law helium gas may be produced and marketed under a license granted by the Secretary of State. This bill undertakes to strengthen and does, in my judgment, materially strengthen the provisions of the existing statute, particularly in the restrictions it throws around the export sale or exportation of the gas. On the other hand, this bill attempts to, and I believe does, liberalize the provisions of existing law only on the subject of making helium gas available for medicinal purposes. These are the two questions to which I desire to direct my attention for just a few moments.

Your Committee on Military Affairs held extensive hearings on this measure. We heard the representatives of the State Department, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of the Interior, and the Bureau of Mines. We heard all those who were opposed to the bill, of whom there were very few. There was very little opposition to the bill.

After extensive hearings, in which the committee members, to my great delight, showed an unusual interest in that phase of the matter which deals with the exportation of this gas, the committee amended the Senate bill in several particulars; and I want to pay tribute to the membership of the committee by saying I have never presided during the consideration of any matter where men were more alert, more careful, and more diligent in seeking to protect the interests of the United States than during the consideration of this bill.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COLDEN. Is there any possibility of imperialistic nations obtaining large quantities of helium that might be used for war purposes?

Mr. MAY. Not unless the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, and the President of the United States all become unfaithful in their duty to their country.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. DORSEY. And for practical purposes, what could helium be used for in time of war?

Mr. MAY. I may answer that by saying the evidence is conclusive and undisputed from all the witnesses, without exception, that helium, as a war material, can be used only for one purpose, and it is not particularly valuable for that purpose.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

The only purpose for which it can be used in connection with military activities is for observation planes or balloons of the lighter-than-air type.

It was proven before our committee that there has been such advancement in the development of heavier-than-air planes and machines that it would be impossible in case of war to use helium gas in these lighter-than-air planes to any advantage whatever. The truth of the matter is that

Dr. Hugo Eckener, the distinguished German aviator, who was invited to testify before the committee, said that Germany had, in fact, abandoned the use of lighter-than-air craft as a war machine.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. On page 140 of the hearings there is a statement by Commander Rosendahl. Commander Rosendahl said this about the military use of dirigibles or, rather, lighter-than-air craft:

However, in a navy such as ours for the national defense of our country, I do believe that dirigibles, both large and small, have very definite usefulness.

Then he went on from that point to tell what the uses are; and if they can be used by our Navy, they can be just as useful in the case of other navies.

Mr. MAY. Yes; but the bill provides they cannot get it for military purposes in any foreign country under any circumstances unless our Board of Munitions Control decides they want to let them have it.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. HARTER. Is it not a fact there is no country in the world that is in the same geographical position as the United States, with oceans, thousands of miles wide, on our east and west coasts, so that we could use an airship as a scout to advantage, while no other nation in the world could so use it?

Mr. MAY. The question is so self-evident, it answers itself.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. When this bill was first before the committee I had grave fears as to the possibility of the exportation of helium gas for war purposes. After carefully listening to the evidence I became convinced that that danger was very small, but I am still concerned greatly about another feature of this bill, and that is its commercial aspect. This country has gone to great trouble and expense in developing its trade relations with the Latin-American countries. We know that Germany is our principal competitor in that field.

Mr. MAY. I know what my friend has in mind.

Mr. WILCOX. Let me finish my question, please. Will the gentleman, and will the committee, accept an amendment which will restrict the sale of helium gas for airship purposes to those corporations and companies operating exclusively between the United States and other countries, and not between foreign points, and in which companies American citizens own as much as 51 percent of the stock?

Mr. MAY. I will say in answer to the gentleman's question that I prefer very much to leave that matter in the hands of the President of the United States, under his own restrictions, because he is Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of this country, and he has back of him his Secretary of State, who is familiar with every foreign alliance that may be in existence, and he also has back of him the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Interior.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes at this time to refer to another subject of vital interest to the Military Affairs Committee in connection with legislation finally passed last night having to do with the improvement of the Washington-Hoover Airport.

We all agree that the airport will not be a perfect one with the passage of the new legislation, and I rise to bring before the Members of the House what seems to me a very important matter affecting the airport and its operation through some information that came to me from the International Pilots Association. The Department of Commerce is charged with the regulation of safety on air lines, including airports—in fact, everything else affecting the safety or regular schedule of airport operation—and I quote from the Department of Air Commerce Act, as amended:

SEC. 5. Subdivision (d), as amended, of such section 3 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 49, sec. 173 (d)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "and provide for the examination and rating of all air lines engaged in interstate or foreign air commerce and establish minimum safety standards for the operation thereof."

Recently a private flier, with a pilot's license, flew to Baltimore in the afternoon and upon his return finally landed at night for his first night landing at the Washington-Hoover Airport. This flyer, not obeying some restrictions, narrowly escaped a crash. About a month ago the Pilots' Association after a meeting addressed certain recommendations to the Department of Air Commerce in the Department of Commerce. Hearing of their expression through the press I contacted a member of the Air Pilots' Association, and at my solicitation obtained a copy of the letter which they addressed to the Air Commerce Bureau on July 17, 1937, having to do with certain restrictions which, as I understand it, are mandatory at the Washington-Hoover Airport, and which I believe are not being completely carried out as they should be by the Department of Commerce, and I may say that as late as this morning I am informed by the International Pilots Association that they have had no reply.

COPY OF LETTER BY DAVID L. BEHNCKE, PRESIDENT OF AIR LINE PILOTS' ASSOCIATION

JULY 17, 1937.

MR. FRED D. FAGG, JR.,
Director of Air Commerce, Department of Commerce,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. FAGG: Pursuant further to our letter dated July 7, your wire dated July 11 and the conference that was held at the Bureau of Air Commerce on July 16, we are submitting herewith a drawing which shows to what extent, in the opinion of the pilots using the field, it should be immediately restricted in the interest of public safety. This, of course, contemplates that the short runway will not be used for DC–2's or DC–3's.

Due to the fact that the conference at the Bureau on July 16 was informal, we have listed the names of the pilots and other representatives that attended the conference.

Those representing the Bureau were: Howard Rough, Bryan Jacobs, John Jaynes.

As far as the pilots are concerned, we would like to have it clearly understood that our main interest at this time is to secure proper safety restrictions on the present landing site which is the Washington-Hoover Airport, and as far as arrangements are concerned for taking care of traffic when landings are not possible at this airport, that is a matter that we feel should be worked out by the Bureau.

The pilots' committee did, however, look over the new Bolling Field and they were favorably impressed with this landing field. The committee was of the opinion that if Bolling Field is designated as an alternate when the Washington-Hoover Airport cannot be used safely that the same ceiling and visibility limitations now in effect at Washington-Hoover Airport be used when air-line ships land at Bolling Field. The pilots' committee was also of the opinion that further restrictions, if any, on Bolling Field if used for commercial purposes could be determined by actual use of the field.

The pilots' committee is further of the opinion that when the restrictions outlined on the attached drawings are placed into effect on the Washington-Hoover Airport and another airport is designated as an alternate, the matter of stating when this field is open or closed for use should be left in the hands of the Traffic Control Division of the Bureau of Air Commerce, this information to be given to the pilot sufficiently ahead of arrival time in order that the company and the Post Office Department will know where the ship is going to land, so they can be governed accordingly.

We repeat that in view of the urgency of this matter action should be taken immediately to place the pilots' safety recommendations into effect.

Very truly yours,

AIR LINE PILOTS' ASSOCIATION,
DAVID L. BEHNCKE, President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD. The Bureau of Air Commerce should do something as suggested by the Air Pilots' Association.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, this proposed legislation appeals to me from the standpoint of trade and its possibilities as related to the future relationship of the countries involved and what we might term the "family of nations." We all know at the present time what England is doing from the standpoint of an armament program. We can somewhat comprehend the great responsibility which rests upon England with reference to her far-flung empire and what she will have to do in policing the peace of the world. At the same time, we are somewhat cognizant of what is taking place on the Asiatic front, and that of course ties in very directly to the long ago enunciated policy of Japan with reference to what students know as the Asiatic Monroe Doctrine, and which in substance means that Japan has made it very clear to the world that insofar as Asia is concerned she proposes to dominate the picture over there. We also have to bear in mind that insofar as the United States is concerned we long ago enunciated the Monroe Doctrine, and that, to me, imposes upon us the responsibility of acting as the chief of police for the Americas for both coasts, Atlantic and Pacific, from the Antarctic to the Arctic Ocean. Japan has furthermore made it very clear to me through releases which she has made in recent years that her attitude is that England shall dominate Western Europe, that Japan shall dominate Asia, and that, insofar as the United States is concerned, if she so desires, she may dominate the two Americas.

I think that is the program that is cut out for us insofar as Japan is concerned, and in my opinion Japan has quite a lot to say about what shall go on at the present time, as well as in the future, especially if she continues to make the progress she has made during the last few years. All other world powers seem to have most unusual respect for Japan just now.

Coming directly to the question of trade in helium, I am not yet ready to concede that our genius and engineering ability cannot design and operate lighter-than-air craft without special assistance from Germany. It seems to me that if we are to produce and dispose of helium, we should proceed to do so insofar as the Americas are concerned. Certainly I do not desire to take action which would prevent the production of helium, but insofar as hospitals are concerned, and the use of helium from a medicinal standpoint, if our people are not consuming it today simply because the cost of production is too high, why do we not proceed to produce on a quantity basis which will lower the price and then quote that lower price to the hospitals of the United States and to our people so that they may use it in those hospitals. I think that will take care of this plea that it should be produced in quantities so as to sell it at a lower price.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. HARLAN. The gentleman understands, of course, that when he is talking about production for medicinal purposes in quantity, he is not even touching the surface of the quantities that would have to be produced to get this cheap price.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is just one factor in the part I propose to follow with. If we accept the philosophy that we must depend upon Germany for our technical skill, insofar as designing and operating these lighter-than-air craft, that is one proposition, but to that I do not subscribe. If we accept the proposition that we must go to Germany and help them build ships through furnishing helium in order to have them train our technical operators, that is a proposition to which I do not subscribe.

So, not accepting that philosophy, it brings me back to the proposition of building our own ships and equipping them with helium and developing trade between the United States and other countries making up North and South America. Because if you go to Europe with your lighter-than-air craft, certainly anyone who has experience in any type of trading knows that you must have landing facilities over there and you must have reciprocal arrangements between this country and Europe. But my contention is we should develop our lighter-than-air craft and develop trade between the Americas along with the reciprocal trade agreement policy, if that is to be followed.

The thought was developed a day or two ago that helium was not to be used for war purposes. We have all experienced enough in the history of the world to know that when you entrench a country in commercial activities you automatically entrench and fortify that country for the purposes of prosecuting a war. So I come back to the proposition that our duty lies, first, between North and South America, because, in my opinion, the influence of that lowly Nazarene has not yet touched the hearts of mankind sufficiently to do away with war. I think there is plenty of notice in the headlines today and throughout the activities of the world to convince us that some day, sooner or later, the United States will have to protect primarily that territory included in the Monroe Doctrine which we have so far attempted to support.

In that connection, Mr. Chairman, in a brief way these thoughts indicate why I am opposed to this legislation. Although its failure may keep buried in the soil of our country for the time being some of these deposits of helium which we have, although it may prevent, in a territory in which I am vitally interested, our going ahead with development at this time, I am still willing to make the sacrifice in that respect to the end that we see a little farther down the road before we turn this helium over to European countries. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] has expired.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in this legislation, especially in view of the fact that the Government plant is located in the district which I have the honor to represent, and the Government has helium rights in 50,000 acres of land, covering an entire gas structure, owning in fee some 13,000 acres of that land. For that reason I have naturally studied the proposition some, although I have not had a chance to study this legislation in detail as much as I would have liked. I read over the measure when it was first presented. I think the committee has done a very fine job; has thoroughly safeguarded the provisions under which the operation will be had.

The Government plant is the most modern and efficient plant of its kind. In fact, the only plant of its type and extent in the world. They are compelled to keep experts. This is a commodity that was little known a few years ago, as my friend Mr. LANHAM, who has been a thorough student of it, will verify. It requires for its extraction and handling men who know the technical side. There must be some outlet in order to maintain a proper executive and technical staff. I would like to see enough of the helium deposit disposed of, not only for commercial purposes but also for medicinal purposes, to enable them to maintain at least a nucleus of a technical staff in the development of the fine possibilities of this great commodity, of which the United States has a practical monopoly. I cannot see any objection to the export features as they are outlined in this bill. As a matter of fact, they are more restricted than they are in the present law. Under the present law the President may permit any amount to be shipped abroad, may even permit it to be shipped abroad without putting a ban on its use for military purposes. Under the provisions of this bill there must be approval of several different Cabinet officers, if I construe the language correctly, and then it can be exported only for commercial purposes. I think it is pretty well safeguarded; and even if there was an attempt to divert some of it to war purposes, the fact is that there is about 100-percent loss per year of operation of any ship in the amount of helium that is used in the ship. In other words, there is 100-percent loss during the year. Therefore there could not be enough reserve supply on hand, if the supply were cut off in this country, for them to do much in foreign countries on a war basis.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Any helium produced by the Government under the present law may not be disposed of except by lease to American citizens or American corporations.

Mr. JONES. That is true; but, as I remember the law, the President may permit its exportation abroad.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. If it is purchased here from some private corporation or individual. But the Government-produced helium may not be disposed of under the present law except by lease to American citizens or corporations.

Mr. JONES. Can the gentleman see any particular objection, when its use is limited by the terms of the proposed law to commercial enterprises, and then only to ships operating between our country and some other country?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Not if we had an effective method of limiting its use to commercial purposes, and if we eliminate the fact that the Government is undoubtedly subsidizing the purchaser of this helium. If they were all American citizens, I would not object.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES. I certainly would not favor sale for commercial purposes to other countries at anything less than cost. I would not favor a subsidy for any use except medicinal or scientific purposes. If they are willing to help us and let us use their technical studies along medicinal and scientific lines, it would seem wise to avail ourselves of that assistance. I think for medicinal and scientific purposes that it might be furnished at less than actual cost, but for commercial purposes, if the bill is not definite in that respect as it now reads, I think it should be so worded that for commercial purposes helium may not be sold to foreign countries at any less figure than would pay the Government for its pro-rata cost of production.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In the first place, we all agree that the Government is not going to make any money out of the sale of helium that is sold to foreign governments. Would the gentleman agree to an amendment that any foreign government which buys helium shall stop sending propaganda into this country as a consideration for the right to purchase helium?

Mr. JONES. I may state to the gentleman from New York that I am not on the committee. I would not want to go into the technical wording of the bill on that proposition. I do not, of course, believe that any government should be permitted to send any subversive propaganda into this country under any circumstances; that is, any propaganda calculated to destroy our philosophy and form of government.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What objection could there be to such an amendment?

Mr. JONES. That, it seems to me, is another question that should not be dealt with in a bill like this. I think that is a matter that probably should be handled by another committee.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman made the statement that the bill was more restrictive than the present law. As a matter of fact, as I understand it, Germany has never bought any helium from us under the present law.

Mr. JONES. I understand the statement was made in the hearings that that was because the price was too high and she could not afford to pay the price that was charged. I may say that there is a greater safeguard in this bill; that it is more restrictive than the present law; but in making this statement I want it understood that I have given only a hurried reading to the bill and may be in error. I helped on the other bill because I had the time to do it, but I have had little time to devote to a study of this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman answer another question? Does the gentleman think that if Germany had this gas she would sell it to us? I believe this is a very pertinent question in connection with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. JONES. That calls for an opinion and conclusion of the witness. I would not want to pass judgment on that. I think we should determine our course on its merits rather than on someone's guess as to what another country would do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, first I want to pay tribute to the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee for having devoted so much time as they have to the consideration and preparation of these helium bills. I cannot understand, however, why we spent many days of hearings on a House bill but in the last days of the meetings of the Military Affairs Committee we switched from the House bill to the Senate bill. I admit that there were objections to the House bill on two different occasions on this floor, but when we were asked to attend that last meeting of the Military Affairs Committee we were asked to attend by written notice to discuss another bill. No mention was made in the written notice that we were going to take up the helium bill. Nor can I understand why the Committee on Rules will decline to give a rule on the wage and hour bill, yet will call a special meeting of their committee to grant a rule on the helium bill. I cannot understand, either, why, in the course of debate on the helium bill in the Senate two whole days were devoted to its consideration yet in the House we are allowed but 1 hour and that almost the last hour of the session.

Why should we rush this thing through and not wait until January of next year, at which time we would have plenty of time to debate the bill? These are just a few of the things I cannot understand.

Getting down to the bill there are these specific objections to it: The large increase that will be brought about in the operation of the Bureau of Mines if this bill goes through; and in this connection I want to read a part of section 1 of the bill appearing on page 2. The Bureau of Mines is authorized to—> construct or acquire plants, wells, pipe lines, compressor stations, camp buildings, and other facilities for the production, storage, repurification, transportation, and sale of helium and helium-bearing gas; and to acquire patents or rights therein and reports of experimentation and research used in connection with the properties acquired or useful in the Government helium operations.

In other words, the Bureau of Mines is going to extend its service very greatly. So, one great objection to the bill is the large increase in cost that it will bring about in the operation of the Bureau of Mines.

There are good features to the bill. I agree that we should sell helium for medical purposes, that we should sell helium for commercial purposes in this country; but just as soon as we export helium we are going to run into real trouble part of which will be, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] brought out, that when we export helium to a country in a position to use it, and there is only one country, Germany, in a position to use it for commercial purposes, how will another country feel that may be competing with the first country in, we will say, the South American trade?

Another question I want to ask in this connection is: Who uses the dirigibles that are going to be flown across the ocean? Is it the average man? No, the average man cannot use them for the simple reason that the cost is prohibitive to the average man. Yet we are passing a bill to enable rich men to transport themselves in dirigibles across the sea and at the same time we are risking the lives of millions of people simply because despite all the safeguards we throw around the export of helium for commercial purposes it still can be used for military purposes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. In 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I think the greatest danger in the bill is the possibility it may be used for military purposes. On page 140 of the hearings Commander Rosendahl, of the United States Navy, stated that there are various ways that helium could be used for military purposes.

Mr. HARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. In a couple of minutes.

Dr. Eckener stated in the Senate hearings that the main reason why Germany or any other country in Europe could not use helium for military purposes is because there is no helium available to them. Many of us served in the last war. We saw the observation balloons and the sausage bags that were used by Germany and by the Allied armies. Dr. Eckener in the military affairs hearing told us if we deflate one dirigible with approximately 7,000,000 cubic feet of helium, we could refill 100 to 150 sausage-bag balloons. I want to say that question was asked by me in the Military Affairs Committee hearings. That answer was given by him and yet when the record was printed my question and answer to me had been stricken out.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DORSEY].

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to debate this bill because I felt that after the membership of the House had read it and the hearings they would have been thoroughly conversant with the bill and very little explanation would have been necessary. However, looking at this from a very practical angle we now have an immense deposit of helium which is not being used for any definite purpose. We do not have any lighter-than-air program in this country. On the other hand, we have a deposit at Amarillo estimated in terms of gas at about 120,000,000,000 cubic feet, with a helium content of 1.8, which when figured down will show that at a maximum production of 24,000,000 cubic feet of helium a year we have a supply that will last for 90 years, or at the present rate of production a supply which would last for 350 years.

What are we going to do with it? Of what use is it at the present time? We have heard here discussed this afternoon the possibility of its being used for military purposes. We have heard much about the good-neighbor policy. Suppose that in time of war some of these foreign countries, upon which we depend at the present time for our supply of manganese, tin, chromium, and other useful war materials, would take the same attitude toward this Nation? Where would we be in time of war? We must depend on other nations for our supply of manganese, even in peacetime. If that same policy were carried out by them, we, too, would be in a very dangerous situation.

What are the possible safeguards that we have in this bill? We have heard that perhaps one of these dirigibles, holding 7,000,000 cubic feet of gas, could be deflated and 100 balloons inflated for observation purposes in time of war. But let us be practical from that angle.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORSEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is making a very strong argument, and I am inclined to believe that some of the things he has said have merit. Would the gentleman agree to an amendment since we are going to sell this gas to foreign countries, that they be prohibited from sending their propaganda against America and the American form of government over here?

Mr. DORSEY. I have enough confidence in our State Department, in the President of the United States, and in the Cabinet officers to take care of all the safeguards which are given to them by this bill.

When it comes to inflating observation balloons for military purposes, the Members, I am sure, are conversant with the dangerous mission in time of war that the observation balloon must perform. It would be no time before 100 of these balloons would be shot down. The gas is gone.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORSEY. I want to complete my statement.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. All of these countries are full of gas. They have their own gas. They can get along without our helium.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Chairman, with the restrictions that we have on the supply and the guaranty that quantities of this gas under license cannot be shipped because of the expense involved, the argument concerning the use of it for military purposes has no merit. As a matter of fact, the cost of transporting helium from Amarillo to New York, because of the containers that must be used, is $25 a thousand cubic feet. When you attempt to transport it across the sea to Europe you will very readily see the cost is absolutely prohibitive.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORSEY. Not at this time. Furthermore, the question of cost and return to the Government has been raised. It is stated we are practically subsidizing the foreign nations so far as securing this gas is concerned. If you will read the bill, you will find that a reasonable price must be set, which reasonable price must include the cost of production, operating charges, and also depreciation and depletion, and must also include a 3½-percent return on investment. That is the very lowest price at which the gas may be sold. But that is not the price that has definitely been set. The Department of the Interior in selling the gas must use that as a base and it may charge any price it sees fit. So this argument about subsidizing foreign countries certainly falls by the wayside.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was first before the Committee on Military Affairs, my natural inclination was to oppose it. I shared the apprehensions of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX], the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS], and others. I asked myself the question propounded here awhile ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]:

> If Germany had the sole supply of helium, would she be willing to sell that helium to the United States?

This is a reasonable question, and it is a pertinent question. However, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DORSEY], who just preceded me, has so clearly pointed out, there are many necessary war materials which the United States does not produce and upon which she must depend in case of conflict. We import manganese from Soviet Russia, India, and Brazil. We must depend pretty largely upon Great Britain, which has a monopoly of rubber, for our supply of rubber. We have to import our tin from China. We must import chromium from South America and other countries. Of course, if we should take the attitude that we were going to have a monopoly of helium in this country and refuse to export it to any other country, those nations would be perfectly right in retaliating on the United States.

I want the members of the Committee to bear in mind that no helium under the provisions of this act is allowed to be exported for a military purpose. The use of the gas exported is to be confined to commercial purposes in the countries with which we deal. Dirigibles flying between the United States, its Territories, and insular possessions and any foreign nation must be refilled in the United States, and it would be almost impossible because of the large percentage of leakage and loss of the gas, for any foreign power to accumulate a sufficient quantity to be of any considerable danger to the United States.

Furthermore, the members of the Committee should bear in mind that the President of the United States and the Munitions Control Board, consisting of the Secretaries of State, War, Navy, Commerce, and the Interior, can at any time they deem fit shut off the export supply even for commercial purposes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. The exportation must be upon the unanimous recommendation of the Munitions Control Board.

Mr. SHORT. Absolutely. The more I study this bill, which was so carefully drawn and which received such minute and careful consideration in the Committee on Military Affairs, the more I believe the fear that some foreign nation could bootleg enough gas to endanger the United States in case of conflict is utterly preposterous and ridiculous. There is no basis for such an apprehension or fear. I do not need to remind the Members of this House that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs believe in national defense and are charged with the direct responsibility of seeing to it that the interests of the United States are at all times safeguarded. We have done this, and we have reached almost a unanimous report on this bill. I trust the Members will pass it by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Is it not probable that the President of the United States and the Secretaries of State, War, Navy, Commerce, and the Interior would also feel the same way as the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SHORT. Certainly; furthermore, this gas is to be used not only for commercial purposes, but also for medicinal purposes, in the treatment of asthma, pneumonia, and other respiratory diseases whose methods of treatment are being advanced and developed.

I trust the Members of the House who have not read the bill will take the word of the Committee on Military Affairs that it safeguards every interest of the United States.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. I am particularly eager to make possible the use of helium in the treatment of asthma and similar diseases. Would the exportation of helium interfere in any way with the maintenance of a sufficient supply in the United States for such medicinal purposes?

Mr. SHORT. I may say to the gentleman it would not. Representatives from the Bureau of Mines and other scientists testified before our committee that the potential supply of helium in this country equals if it does not surpass the supply of petroleum, a fact which was amazing to me. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to repeat the rather lengthy statement I made yesterday in regard to this bill. During the course of last evening and this morning I have become aware that certain Members of the House who are possibly more politically inclined than others in connection with this bill might vote against the bill for some slight political advantage to themselves in their own districts.

I was opposed to the original bill before the House committee and signed the minority report, but following passage of the Senate bill I discovered, as did most of us on the Republican side of the committee, that our objections to the original bill were overcome either by the amendments adopted in the Senate or by further amendments to the Senate bill adopted in the House committee prior to its reporting out this bill and which will be offered here today.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McGRANERY. The previous speaker stated this helium would not be used for military purposes. What guarantee has the United States that it will not be so used?

Mr. ANDREWS. It is stated in the bill that the gas cannot be sold to be used for military purposes. The bill further provides that there can be no exportation for any purpose except upon the issuance of a license by the Secretary of State on the unanimous recommendation of the National Munitions Control Board, which includes the Secretaries of State, War, Navy, Commerce, and the Interior. Has the gentleman no faith in them?

Mr. McGRANERY. What guarantee does the Government have, after it has parted with the helium, that the gas will not be used for a military purpose?

Mr. ANDREWS. There is no guarantee, but they could control to whom they sell the helium.

Mr. McGRANERY. They have no guarantee, and if they did have a guarantee they could not enforce, nor could this Government enforce, nonuse of the gas for military purposes once the gas has been parted with.

Mr. ANDREWS. I may ask the gentleman what guarantee we have today under the present act?

Mr. McGRANERY. None whatever, although we are not parting with our helium.

Mr. ANDREWS. Not at the moment.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. Is it not a fact that for military purposes helium would have to be exported in enormous quantities in metal containers? The Secretaries of State, War, Navy, Interior, and Commerce, upon the recommendation of the President, are in this bill directed to see to it that helium is not exported in quantities which could be used for military purposes. Regardless of what purpose it is intended to be used for, the bill prohibits exportation in quantities which could be used for military purposes.

Mr. SHORT. And the ships must be refilled here.

Mr. WILCOX. And ships may only be refilled in the United States.

Mr. DONDERO and Mr. BARDEN rose.

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield first to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Suppose the helium was exported and got into foreign hands, for what military purposes could it be used outside of its use in airships for observation purposes?

Mr. WILCOX. It could only be used for the inflation of airships; and Commander Rosendahl, of the American Navy, who, I presume, knows more about this subject than any other man—in America, at least—testified that in view of the development of antiaircraft guns and the modern type of airplane, the lighter-than-air ship is of no military value except for observation purposes, and then only for a country situated like ours, which is separated from its neighbors by large expanses of water.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat concerned about the military use of this gas. Had this law been in force and effect at the beginning of the World War, three dirigibles would have given Germany enough gas to inflate from 300 to 450 observation balloons.

You and I know that if an explosive bullet goes through a balloon inflated with hydrogen gas it means that the balloon is going up in flames. This is not true of a balloon inflated with helium gas.

I would like to ask that at the conclusion of my remarks some member of the committee answer the statement made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS]. Was there testimony before this committee to the effect that one dirigible would contain enough of this gas to inflate from 100 to 150 balloons? Was this testimony given; and if it was, was it stricken from the record; and if so, why was it stricken?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman that testimony was given by Dr. Eckener, and I drew the statement from him myself. He stated there would be enough gas in one of these Zeppelins to fill at least 100 balloons. I cannot say whether it was stricken out of the record or not.

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman from New Jersey said it was stricken from the record. If it was, why was the information withheld from this House?

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. The gentleman realizes, I presume, that Dr. Eckener is the foremost authority in this or any other country——

Mr. ENGEL. I yielded for the purpose of getting an answer to my question. Was that testimony given, and was it stricken from the record?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, for the past dozen years I have given considerable study to military questions and, particularly, as that subject touches the use of airplanes and lighter-than-air ships. I believe I can say without fear of contradiction that the Army regards the rigid airship as an obsolete weapon. The balloon, in my opinion, likewise has become an obsolete weapon for observation. The autogyro has completely eliminated the captive balloon for observation purposes.

The sooner we get rid of nonrigid dirigibles, as well as captive balloons, and supplant them with more modern weapons, the sooner we shall have an effective military establishment.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I should like to, but my time is limited.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I am a member of the committee.

Mr. COLLINS. I decline to yield. All of the reports we have coming into our possession with regard to the present war in Spain, which seems to be the proving ground for all of the nations of the world in the use of modern implements of war, is to the effect that even the larger airship has not proven to be as useful as some of us had been led to believe, although we are continuing to spend large sums of money upon its development.

It is my understanding that the Navy has reached the point where the last two Chiefs of Naval Operations have been against the dirigible as a war instrument, especially Admiral Standley, who was very critical of it, and I make the statement today that the primary reason for the Navy buying any dirigibles is because of the lighter-than-air industry. Their motive is to encourage the industry. The only type of airship that should be built, in my opinion, even for commercial purposes, is one of metal-clad construction, invented or sponsored by a man named Ritchie. I should like to see someone develop for commercial purposes a metal-clad dirigible, which we often have spoken of as the future freight train of the air. It has little value as a military weapon because of its size, because of the fact that it is easy to shoot down, and you have to have some object in warfare that is hard to hit, and everybody who has sense enough to come in out of the rain knows that a big dirigible is easily shot down. Let us have somebody develop it who wants to. We are not going to do it in this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing the conservation, production, and exploitation of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense, and to the development of commercial aeronautics, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1925, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to have my question answered now.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I have only 5 minutes and the gentleman can answer when I get through. The autogyro can be destroyed with a machine gun, and a balloon inflated with hydrogen gas will go into flames with one explosive bullet, but you can put five bullets or a 1-pounder through a helium-inflated balloon, and then pull it down and repair it and it is still a balloon. The present criticism of the balloon is that they must use hydrogen gas, and that they do not have helium. I ask this question, and I think it is a fair question. Why did this committee strike out the testimony of Dr. Eckener from the record, if it was stricken out?

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman can take 5 minutes and answer in his own time. The statement was made on the floor of this House by a member of the committee that Dr. Eckener testified that you could inflate from 100 to 150 observation balloons with the helium gas from one dirigible, and that that testimony was taken down, but it is not now a part of the record. I want to have my question answered: Was this testimony stricken from the record, and if so, why, and why is not this House entitled to hear it?

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. McGRANERY. The gentleman has stated that a 30–30 bullet, shooting through a hydrogen-gas bag, would utterly destroy it and start it into flame. I served in the Balloon Corps. I say that a bullet need not puncture that gas bag. All it need do is to get so close to it as to follow the gas leak from the bag and it would burst into flames. The gentleman is right. I would like the gentleman now to yield to me further with respect to the gyro.

Mr. ENGEL. Everybody knows that we are sitting on top of dynamite over in Europe and over in Asia. Everybody knows that every European country and all of Asia and Japan are trying to obtain every military weapon, from scrap iron up, and everyone knows that if we went to war over there and they had these balloons they would pump that helium out of those dirigible ships into observation balloons. Why hurry this thing; why not wait until the next session of Congress? Perhaps the war clouds will be gone by that time.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Under the present statute it can be disposed of in any way they please.

Mr. ENGEL. Let me answer. The fact remains right now that no helium gas is being exported to European countries, and if none is going to be exported under this act, why pass it?

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Would the gentleman like to see a recurrence of the Hindenburg disaster?

Mr. ENGEL. That has nothing to do with the situation at all. I would rather see a recurrence of the Hindenburg disaster than to see another war in Europe destroying hundreds of thousands of human lives.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to answer his question?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. I think I can clear up the gentleman's mind.

Mr. ENGEL. I would like to support this bill, but I have stated a question that is in the minds of many Members here.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair to make a comment. There is only one section to this bill. The sections in the formal part of it are sections amendatory of other sections. Therefore it is the ruling of the Chair that the Clerk read the entire bill, at which time it will then be subject to amendment.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. There is a pro-forma amendment now before the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. This will interfere with no rights of the Members to be heard.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be considered as read.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, on page 6 I have an amendment which is on the Clerk's desk. Would that deprive me of considering my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. This would deprive no Member of his right to have his amendment considered.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read.

Mr. O'MALLEY and Mr. DICKSTEIN objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION 1. That for the purpose of conserving, producing, and selling helium gas the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Mines, is authorized:

(a) To acquire by purchase, lease, or condemnation, lands or interests therein or option thereon, including but not limited to sites, rights-of-way, and oil or gas leases containing obligations to pay rental in advance or damages arising out of the use and operation of such properties; but such lands or interests in lands may be acquired by condemnation only when necessary for the production or conservation of helium to meet the needs of the Army and Navy and other agencies of the Federal Government;

(b) To make contracts and agreements (with optional provisions where necessary) for the acquisition, processing, or conservation of helium-bearing gas;

(c) To construct or acquire plants, wells, pipe lines, compressor stations, camp buildings, and other facilities, for the production, storage, repurification, transportation, and sale of helium and helium-bearing gas; and to acquire patents or rights therein and reports of experimentation and research used in connection with the properties acquired or useful in the Government's helium operations;

(d) To dispose by lease or sale of wells, lands, or interests therein, not valuable for helium production; to dispose of oil, gas, and byproducts of helium operations not needed for Government use; and to issue leases to the surface of lands or structures thereon for grazing or other purposes when the same may be done without interfering with the production of helium.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed, if possible under the terms hereof, to acquire by purchase all properties developed or constructed by private parties prior to the passage of this act for helium production, such purchase to be at a price or prices recommended to be fair and reasonable by at least two of a board of three appraisers, the members of which shall be selected as follows: One by the Secretary of the Interior, one by the owner of the properties sought to be acquired, and one by the two appraisers so selected. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to incur obligations and enter into agreements for the purchase of such properties, and every such agreement shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Government for the payment of the cost thereof, such payment to be made from any appropriations hereafter made for such purpose. Prior to the date of execution of an agreement or agreements for the purchase of such properties, the Government shall not sell helium as authorized in section 3 (b) of this act: Provided, That the foregoing restriction upon the sale of helium by the Government shall be inoperative in the event that (1) the owner of any such properties shall refuse or neglect to appoint an appraiser within 30 days after approval of this amendatory act, or (2) the owner of any such properties having so appointed an appraiser shall refuse or neglect to execute an agreement or agreements for the sale thereof, at the price recommended by at least two members of the board of appraisers, within 30 days after said appraisers shall have recommended such price.

Any known helium-gas-bearing land on the public domain not covered at the time by leases or permits under the act of February 25, 1920, entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain", as amended, may be reserved for the purposes of this act, and the United States reserves the ownership and the right to extract, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, helium from all gas produced from lands so permitted, leased, or otherwise granted for development: Provided, That in the extraction of helium from gas produced from such lands, it shall be so extracted as to cause no substantial delay in the delivery of gas produced from the well to the purchaser thereof.

SEC. 2. That the Bureau of Mines, acting under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to maintain and operate helium production and repurification plants together with facilities and accessories thereto; to store and care for helium, to conduct exploration for and production of helium on and from the lands acquired, leased, or reserved; and to conduct experimentation and research for the purpose of discovering helium supplies and improving processes and methods of helium production, repurification, storage, and utilization.

SEC. 3. (a) That the Army and Navy and other agencies of the Federal Government may requisition helium from the Bureau of Mines and make payments therefor from any applicable appropriations by advancing or repaying to and for the use of said Bureau proportionate shares of the expenses incident to the administration, operation, and maintenance of the Government's helium plants and properties.

(b) That helium not needed for Government use may be produced and sold upon payment in advance in quantities and under regulations approved by the President, for medical, scientific, and commercial use, including inflation of passenger-carrying airships: Provided, That such sales of helium shall be at reasonable prices (established by said regulations) based upon the cost of acquiring, developing, maintaining, and operating the Government properties used for such helium production; and such sales of helium shall be upon condition that the Federal Government shall have a right to repurchase helium so sold that has not been lost or dissipated, when needed for Government use, under terms and at prices established by said regulations.

(c) All moneys received under this act, including moneys from sale of helium or other products resulting from helium operations (except moneys received in payment for helium from Government departments or agencies under subsection (a) hereof), shall be credited to a special helium-production fund from which purchasers of helium may be reimbursed for payments for helium in excess of deliveries, and the Secretary of the Interior through the Bureau of Mines may draw on said fund to pay expenses of acquiring, administering, operating, maintaining, and developing helium properties. Amounts accumulating in said fund in excess of amounts the Secretary of the Interior deems necessary to assure payment of such expenses shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall render to Congress on or before the 1st day of January of each year a report showing the amount of moneys credited to such helium-production fund and the amount of disbursements made therefrom during the preceding fiscal year, and the unexpended and unobligated balances on hand in such fund as of the end of such fiscal year.

"SEC. 4. No helium gas shall be exported from the United States, or from its Territories and possessions, until after application has been made to the Secretary of State and a license authorizing said exportation has been obtained from him and approved by the President: Provided, That under regulations governing exportation of helium approved by the National Munitions Control Board and the Secretary of the Interior, export shipments of quantities of helium that are not of military importance as defined in said regulations, and which do not exceed a maximum to be specified therein, may be made under license granted by the Secretary of State without such specific recommendation. Such regulations shall not permit accumulations of helium in quantities of military importance in any foreign country, nor the exportation of helium to countries named in proclamations of the President issued pursuant to section 1 (a) or (c) of the Neutrality Act of May 1, 1937 (Public Resolution No. 27 of the Seventy-fifth Congress) while such proclamations are in effect, and shall require exporters to submit a sworn statement to the Secretary of State showing the quantity, destination, consignee, and intended use of each proposed exportation. The National Munitions Control Board shall report on January 1, and on July 1, of each year all sales of helium made to foreign governments, or to the citizens of foreign governments giving the amount sold and to whom sold.

"Any person violating any of the provisions of this section or of the regulations made pursuant hereto, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and the Federal courts of the United States are hereby granted jurisdiction to try and determine all questions arising under this section.

"The National Munitions Control Board shall include in its annual report to the Congress full information concerning the licenses issued hereunder, together with such information and data collected by the Board as may be considered of value in the determination of questions related to the exportation of helium gas.

"SEC. 5. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may each designate representatives to cooperate with the Department of the Interior in carrying out the purposes of this act, and shall have complete right of access to plants, data, and accounts."

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DONDERO (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. O'MALLEY (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Reserving the right to object, I will not object if the right to offer amendments to this bill is preserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New York and to all members of the committee that no one will be prejudiced in the offering of amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 18, strike out "including inflation of passenger-carrying airships" and insert "except that helium may be sold for the inflation of only such airships as operate in or between the United States and its Territories and possessions, or between the United States or its Territories and possessions and foreign countries."

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, when the original House bill was reported by the House committee I prepared the minority report which was signed by myself and nine other members of the Committee on Military Affairs. In that minority report I undertook to set forth the dangers that I saw in the bill as reported. At that time I called specific attention to the necessity for tightening up the provisions of this bill concerning the exportation of helium in quantities that might make it possible for it to be used in military operations. I also called attention to the necessity for tightening up the provisions for its exportation for use in commercial airships.

Since the bill has been reported it has come back to us in the form of a Senate bill and the Committee on Military Affairs has proposed certain amendments, including the one which is now before you.

I would be the last man in Congress to vote for any bill that would make any instrumentality of war available to any country, but I believe that the provisions of the bill as amended are sufficient to protect the United States against the exportation of any helium, which may be used for military purposes. The bill now prohibits its exportation in such quantities as would make its use in military operations possible.

Now, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], who propounded several questions relative to testimony alleged to have been delivered before the committee and stricken out of the record, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the testimony to which he refers was simply a matter of arithmetic; a simple calculation. It is true that the doctor testified that a dirigible airship containing 6,000,000 cubic feet of gas contained 100 times as much gas as a balloon containing 60,000 cubic feet, but that is simply a matter of arithmetic.

However, the reason that this evidence does not appear in the record if in fact it does not so appear is probably due to the fact that the doctor was testifying before the committee in executive session and no part of his testimony delivered in executive session was reported in the record. But the point covered by the gentleman, to wit, whether or not a dirigible held more gas than an observation balloon is simply a matter of computation. It is simple as if I testified now before this House that a bushel measure contains enough grain or enough of whatever is in the measure to fill four peck measures. That is a matter of simple computation. So that there is nothing strange or remarkable about that testimony. There is nothing crooked about it not appearing in the report of the testimony.

Now, with reference to the amendment before the committee, I want to call attention to the necessity of adopting this particular amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think one of the most serious provisions in this bill, one that I think needs to be still further cleared up, is this matter of permitting the sale of helium for commercial purposes, for use in commercial airships. My objection to the bill, which I set forth in the minority report, was to the effect that if we sell helium for the inflation of commercial airships operated by foreign countries or by companies owned by foreign capital that we are, in effect, furnishing the means for our competitors to enter our trade field against us. I am particularly concerned about the South American trade.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman inform us how many committee amendments there are?

Mr. WILCOX. Probably half a dozen. They are printed in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. In regard to the question that was asked Dr. Eckener as to how many observation balloons could be filled by the quantity of helium necessary to inflate one of these dirigibles, I asked the question, but the question is not in those hearings. It was answered by Dr. Eckener. He said it would fill approximately 100 observation balloons. That question was not asked in the executive session.

Mr. WILCOX. I may say to the gentleman from New Jersey that if he will turn to page 124 of the hearings he will find that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FADDIS, asked that question and Dr. Eckener's answer was "One hundred of them, roughly, if the size is appropriate." That testimony is in the printed record.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. That may be very true, but I also asked the question, and my question is not in the record.

Mr. WILCOX. Do not take up all of my time on that, please.

Mr. Chairman, I was discussing the amendment and was just about to make the statement that our administration had negotiated reciprocal trade agreements with our Latin-American neighbors. We are making a desperate effort to develop trade relations with Latin America. In accomplishing this certain trade agreements have been negotiated which I conceive are of distinct disadvantage to my own congressional district; nevertheless they have been negotiated and I have every desire to see them become eminently successful. I am not willing, therefore, to permit the use of helium gas in the inflation of airships which are to be used by any country to enter our South American field in competition with American manufacturers and American business.

The committee amendment now under consideration seeks to prohibit this sort of thing. The amendment limits the use of helium gas to the inflation of airships which operate only between the United States and foreign countries. I believe, however, that a further amendment is necessary in order to prohibit the operation of helium-filled airships between foreign points and South American points, and a little later in the debate I shall offer such an amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. I was going to ask the gentleman that very question, as to whether or not this language was sufficiently specific to insure the stopping of the use of these dirigibles in trade at the United States before proceeding to some South American country.

Mr. WILCOX. I am afraid not, although undoubtedly this amendment was intended to accomplish that purpose. It does not, however, actually accomplish it.

Mr. LANHAM. Does the gentleman intend to offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. WILCOX. I intend to offer an amendment to this amendment. The language of the amendment reads simply that airships inflated with helium shall be operated only between the United States and foreign countries. On first reading, one would reach the conclusion that the provisions of the amendment would be all the limitation necessary, but I ask the Members to visualize a triangle, with the United States forming one point, Germany another point, and South America the third point. Under the amendment as drawn I believe it to be possible for an airship to operate from the United States to Germany, to South America, and back to the United States. I have no objection whatever to the operation from the United States to Germany and from Germany to the United States, nor do I object to the operation of such airships from the United States to South America. In fact, I want to encourage such operation, but not from Germany to the United States, to South America, and back. I do not want that third leg of the triangle to be completed. That is to say, I do not want these airships to operate from Germany to South America and simply stop by here to refill their gas tanks on the way home. I want the amendment sufficiently specific that no airship inflated with American helium may fly from Germany to South America and come back through the United States to refill on its way back. I believe the amendment can be perfected, and I shall offer a perfecting amendment.

Now, in conclusion, let me say that I would never have voted for this bill if it had not been perfected so as to prevent the exportation of helium in quantities possible for military use. Neither would I support any measure making our helium supply available for foreign owned and operated airships which could enter our trade field in competition with us. But with the adoption of this amendment and the further amendment which I will shortly propose, the measure will safeguard American interests. It will encourage development of lighter-than-air craft by American capital and it will prevent exportation of helium for war purposes. It will then be a good bill and I shall vote for it. But unless both amendments are adopted I shall be forced to vote against the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, history has a strange way of repeating itself in this country. Back in 1917 we shipped our money to Europe, but did not get any of it back. All we got back was trouble. "Uncle Sucker Samuel", as they call this country in Europe, is going to offer the Europeans a supply of helium gas, one of the few monopolies that we have, and is going to ship that gas, if this bill passes, to countries that never kept any agreement with us, to nations which defaulted on their war debts, and whose word is not worth a thing in any agreement they might make to get their hands on this gas. Personally, I think that the American people are a little sick and tired of their Legislature making suckers of them in favor of foreigners and foreign countries.

Billions of dollars are owing to us which we are never going to get back. We lent Europe our officers and helped win the war. We gave them the lives of thousands of young American citizens, and the only thing we get in return is polite notes declining payment of their debts which they owe us and ridicule for being naive enough to suggest that our taxpayers would like their money back.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to offer an amendment to the bill that no helium gas may be sold to any country for any purpose that is in default upon its war-debt payments to our Government. I trust that no Member of this body will vote against such an amendment, because I say that any agreement we may make with these countries will be broken just as they have broken their word with us on the war debt. If one of those countries over there gets its hands on this helium in sufficient quantities to use for military purposes, it will tell us to go to the place they told us to go when we asked them to make payments on the war debt. They will use this gas for military purposes, and once we have parted with it we will have nothing to say about it unless we are willing to go to war with them to control its use.

Mr. BARDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BARDEN. Did not Germany recently disregard its agreement with us with reference to armaments?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes. These countries laugh at us. They think we are suckers over here. In fact, they print pictures of "Uncle Sucker Sam." Now we propose to part with the only thing we have that they are afraid we might use against them. Permit them to buy it and they will come over here with their ships and tell us, "Now, try to collect the war debts."

I hope the gentlemen will support my amendment that not one of the countries can get a thing this country owns which is of value to us until they make payments on the war debt.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. Suppose Germany had control of this helium gas and America wanted to get it, does the gentleman suppose we could get it?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do not believe we could get anything from Germany or any of the other nations if we cannot get our war debts paid by them. Our Secretary of State has sent them polite notes for 15 years and they laugh at us. After they get this gas they will laugh at us when we ask them to keep their agreements about its use.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Would the gentleman prefer to leave it open like it is at the present time, under a license, or would he trust the President of the United States and the Control Board?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I would be happy to trust the President of the United States, but the man who is now President will not always be President. We have had some Presidents that the gentleman has not trusted any more than I have.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Connecticut to the committee amendment: Page 5, line 20, after the word "airship", insert "as are wholly owned by citizens of the United States and."

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to prohibit the sales for airship purposes of helium produced by our country to any foreign nation or any foreign national. It seems to me there are two objections which cannot be overcome to the bill as it stands in relation to the sale of helium abroad; one the fact that we cannot obtain proper safeguards against the use of the helium for military purposes. I do not think we can obtain any real safeguard against that use. There has been a good deal of difference of opinion as to whether helium can be used for military purposes, but we have the testimony of men like Commander Rosendahl, Dr. Eckener, and others that there are military uses for helium. As long as our Government is producing and selling it I do not think we should sell it to the foreign nations if it may be used for military purposes.

It is a pretty well-defined policy of ours not to sell war materials to foreign governments, although we are now considering leasing warships to a foreign government in order to get around the policy of selling them. I do not think we should establish the policy of our Government's selling war materials to foreign governments.

The second reason is that under this bill we are subsidizing the purchasers of the helium. I am perfectly willing to subsidize American purchasers of airships and operators of airships. I am perfectly willing to subsidize the use of helium for medical purposes. But I do not think we ought to subsidize foreign nations and foreign governments.

If you will look on page 6 you will find that the things taken into consideration in setting a price for this helium include interest at the rate of not less than 3½ percent per annum on capital hereafter expended. That does not take into consideration the cost already involved in the plant. The main reason for Germany wanting to acquire helium from us is that they cannot produce it commercially in this country or any other at a price which would make it economically advisable for the Germans to use in their airships.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman not know that the investment of the United States in the lands that bear this helium is so large that if you calculated the cost of production on that basis you would never get it even for medicinal purposes in this country?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I would be perfectly willing to produce it and provide it free for the Bureau of Public Health to be turned over to genuine medical use.

Mr. FADDIS. That is already taken care of in the bill, as far as medicinal purposes are concerned.

Mr. GREEN. Does the gentleman think any country similarly situated as we are would let our Government take their limited supply of helium where it is easily exhausted and the supply is so small?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. I do not agree with the gentleman it is easily exhausted.

We have a large supply of helium, and I would like to see it developed for use by our own citizens. I should not like to see us subsidize other countries in their use of this gas.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

May I say to the Members of the Committee that I referred to this matter yesterday in discussing this bill. This Government has under this administration entered into many reciprocal agreements. If we are to have lighter-than-air ship development in the United States and are to build airships in America, they will be built for use in international trade along transoceanic routes. The only way in which they will be used in such foreign trade is in cooperation with the airship companies of other nations. They will be on a cooperative basis in just the same way the airplane lines, the heavier-than-air lines, are now being developed between this country and Bermuda and between this country and England across the North Atlantic. We are not sending Pan-American alone to Bermuda or to England. No; the British are not going to give us landing rights and refueling facilities without having some interest in those air trade routes. They are insisting that the British Imperial Airways cooperate with us in the establishment of such lines across the transoceanic routes. The same thing is going to be true with reference to the development of commercial lighter-than-air ships, that is, the development is going to be through the cooperation of this country with other countries.

We Americans have had one or two observers on every trans-Atlantic trip which has been made by the Hindenburg. These are men who are skilled in the operation of the smaller type of blimps. Representatives of the Navy who are assigned to lighter-than-air development have traveled across in the Hindenburg in order to get experience so they may be in position to navigate the airships when they are constructed in this country.

May I correct one statement made by the gentleman from Connecticut with reference to cost? The bill itself specifically provides, on page 5:

> That such sales of helium shall be at reasonable prices (established by said regulations) based upon the cost of acquiring, developing, maintaining, and operating the Government properties.

There is no question here about a subsidy to any foreign nation. Such nations are going to pay for anything they get. However, in order to develop lighter-than-air in this country we must have helium at a reasonable price. If we are to develop helium, we must offer it at a fair price, because our nationals will not go to Europe on a helium-filled ship and come back on a hydrogen-filled ship.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. If we mean to advance the policy of being a good neighbor, this is a chance to act it as well as say it.

Mr. HARTER. The gentleman's statement is absolutely true.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SMITH] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Connecticut) there were—ayes 32, noes 56.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Committee amendment: Page 6, line 1, after the word "properties", insert "and the payment of interest at a rate of not less than 3½ percent per annum on capital hereafter expended, except from the special fund established in subsection (c) of section 3 of this act for properties, facilities, and helium-bearing gas lands, as are."

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the question has been raised as to whether or not the Zeppelins have any military value. I have here the statement of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Edison, before the House Committee on Naval Affairs, on July 26, 1937. Because of lack of time I shall only briefly refer to it. The statement reads in part as follows:

> We have not built enough of these airships, in my opinion, to know whether they are any good from a military standpoint or not. It is much the same as if the Wright Brothers had made a flight at Kitty Hawk, and then we had ordered two or three airplanes of that vintage, and tried them out in flight when we had only built about three or four airplanes. I do not think anybody is competent to say at the present state of the development whether lighter-than-air has any military value or not.

Mr. Edison further states that he believes Dr. Eckener does not have enough of such information. Mr. Edison recommended to the Committee on Naval Affairs that we build three Zeppelins, and stated that in his opinion the Zeppelin may not be any more vulnerable to attack than an airplane carrier on the surface of the sea. It is also his opinion that possibly the Zeppelin can carry a number of bombing planes.

I have here an article from the New York Times of May 19, 1937, which states:

> Dr. Hugo Eckener, head of the German Commission * * * is coming to Washington to see the President, trying to get helium.

The same day, in the Washington Post appeared the following:

> German planes shower death daily on defenseless Bilbao. German and Italian bombers shower death daily on 400,000 huddled in Bilbao.

The article goes on to state that there is no defense against these planes, and that the German and Italian planes go on and on killing helpless people.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. No; I have not the time.

I now refer to the report of the committee on page 4. The committee in reporting out this bill, which is being considered today, states:

> No humanitarian measure deserves a more immediate hearing because of its life-saving possibilities—

And so on.

Life-saving possibilities, indeed!

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I have not the time, I am sorry.

The report goes on to state:

Any helium sold may be recaptured for Government use in time of national emergency.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I cannot yield.

How are you going to go over to Germany and get the helium and bring it back here?

Then the report goes on to state that under such an agreement the United States will serve as a sort of helium filling station, and the report further states that the exportation of helium as authorized by the bill, is consistent with our good-neighbor policy and will do much to promote international good will by making helium available for the alleviation of human suffering, if you please. The alleviation of human suffering, indeed. Look at these newspaper clippings telling of the killing of helpless women and children by foreign bombing airplanes.

Let us defeat the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the committee amendment offered by Mr. FADDIS: On page 6, lines 1 to 6, strike out the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"And the payment of interest at a rate of not less than 4½ percent per annum on all capital heretofore or hereafter invested, after making due allowance for depreciation and deterioration and deducting one-third of the entire investment to be allowed for purposes of national defense, except from the special fund established in subsection (c) of section 3 of this act for properties, facilities, and helium-bearing gas lands as are."

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment is in every respect fair. I do not believe this Nation should subsidize foreign interests, and neither should we subsidize domestic interests in lighter-than-air craft, but especially do I object to foreign interests being subsidized.

Under the provisions of this bill, unless my amendment is adopted, foreign nations will receive the advantage of all our prior investments in the development of helium. They will receive the advantage of our prospecting work and our experimental work as well as all our valuable patents with respect to the apparatus used to extract this helium from natural gas. I have provided that in computing the cost of this helium for sale, the cost shall be computed taking the entire investment into consideration, allowing for depreciation and deterioration and subtracting one-third of the entire cost for purposes of national defense.

I believe it is no more than fair that this amendment should be adopted and that the United States of America and the taxpayers thereof should not be subjected to this subsidization.

As far as domestic lighter-than-air craft are concerned, everyone within the hearing of my voice knows full well once they are put into operation they will be amply subsidized by mail contracts. Therefore it would be unfair and unjust to the American taxpayer to subsidize them doubly.

Mr. Chairman, I trust this amendment to the committee amendment will be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the committee amendment and against the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. McGRANERY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer at the same page.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the request would not bar the consideration of the gentleman's amendment.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. CLASON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, am I correct in my understanding of the Chair's ruling that amendments to any part of the bill are proper to be submitted at any time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WILCOX. And the fact that amendments have been passed on with respect to that portion of the bill does not bar such amendments.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, first I address my remarks to the committee amendment found on page 6, following the language:

That such sales of helium shall be at reasonable prices (established by said regulations) based upon the cost of acquiring, developing, maintaining, and operating the Government property.

The committee amendment reads as follows:

And the payment of interest at a rate of not less than 3½ percent per annum on capital hereafter expended.

The Committee on Military Affairs in the consideration of this measure gave great thought to the matter of a proper charge to be made for the helium which is to be sold for commercial purposes. Despite the arguments that have been presented here, this is in no wise a subsidy bill. The language of the bill itself as I have read it to you provides that those purchasing the helium must pay the cost of acquiring, developing, maintaining, and operating the Government property. It is obvious that the Government property is already invested in those facilities and that no returns on this investment would be expected or received by the Government. As long as a commercial purchaser pays a price which includes proper allowance for depreciation and depletion, then the Government's original investment remains unimpaired and unaffected by the addition of the commercial production. To charge the commercial purchaser an additional amount for interest is unfair because through these charges he would be in reality paying the only interest charge on this capital and would be paying an undue share of the expense entailed by the military requirements that these facilities be kept available for wartime production.

In regard to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] he bases an interest rate of 4½ percent per annum, which is away in excess of the rates of interest paid by the Government for funds which it invests in public property, and he makes his interest rate retroactive so that it applies not only to property hereafter purchased but to property acquired years ago as a reserve. As long as those who are purchasing this helium pay such an amount based on depreciation and depletion, they are taking care of any expense that the Government may have been put to. In addition thereto the committee amendment provides the purchaser of commercial helium must pay interest at the rate of 3½ percent per annum on property hereafter acquired or constructed for helium production.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FADDIS) there were—ayes 21, noes 54.

So the substitute amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 6, strike out the period after the word "production", insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That notwithstanding the foregoing provision, helium shall be sold for medicinal purposes at prices which will permit its general use therefor."

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the committee amendment. I take it there will be no question on the part of anybody with reference to the adequacy or the desirability of this amendment to make helium available for medicinal purposes at prices which will permit its general use.

I move the adoption of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 14, after the word "him", strike out "and approved by the President" and insert "on the joint recommendation of all of the members of the National Munitions Control Board and the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment comes about by reason of the action taken in the Senate when the bill was passed by the Senate. Both the House bill and the bill S. 1567 which we are now considering contained the language originally which constitutes this House amendment. The Senate struck it out and inserted approval by the President. It has been the thought all along and it is the recommendation of the five secretaries and the President, that the control of the exportation of helium should be placed under the National Munitions Control Board and the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILCOX: Page 5, line 23, after the word "Provided", insert "no helium shall be sold for the inflation of any airship operating between two foreign countries notwithstanding such airship may also touch at some point of the United States: Provided further."

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment that I suggested a few moments ago when I discussed the triangle of the trade route. Under the amendment adopted by the committee we sought to prohibit the use of helium gas for the inflation of airships competing with our American trade.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, is there not another committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is another committee amendment, of course, the Chair would like to know it.

Mr. HARTER. There is not another committee amendment, but there is an amendment which I sent to the desk with reference to some repetition that occurs in the bill on account of the Senate action.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARTER: Page 8, line 8, after the word "exportation", strike out all of the remaining language in line 8 and all of lines 9, 10, 11, and 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'MALLEY: Page 6, line 13, after the word "regulations", insert "Provided, however, That no helium shall be sold for any purpose whatsoever to any country or to concerns or persons in any country that is in default to the United States on the payment of any interest or principal of its World War debt to the United States."

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think my amendment is self-explanatory. It provides that no country that is in default upon any part of the payment of its war debt to this country may purchase this helium if this bill is passed, to use it for any purposes whatsoever. I certainly do not think that anybody in this Chamber is in favor of selling any more things to European nations who have not yet paid any of their war debts to us or kept their agreements upon their debts. If in the last days of this Congress we are willing to put the American taxpayer in the same position he was put in by loans of great amounts of money during the World War, there is nothing I can do to prevent it beyond using every effort to defeat this bill. I will never vote for a bill to sell a valuable national resource to countries that have not paid us anything they owe us and who have broken their pledges to us time and again.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Is the gentleman in favor of reciprocal trade agreements?

Mr. O'MALLEY. From what I have seen of the working of those reciprocal trade agreements, I am not in favor of them. I am against Uncle Sam being made a sucker of by European countries any more, and would vote to stop making any treaties with countries that have failed to pay their debts.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Does the gentleman have any idea that any country that owes our country any money would sell us helium or anything else that it needed?

Mr. O'MALLEY. When those countries would not keep their agreements on their war debts, when they say by their dictators and kings that treaties and agreements are scraps of paper, they will not keep any agreement entered into under this bill. Although in the last days of any session some bad legislation passes, I do hope, if this bill passes, we will adopt the amendment I have offered and see that the chislers in Europe do not get in on this helium until they keep their word.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. The gentleman realizes that Germany does not owe this country any money, doesn't he?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Oh, the gentleman is incorrect. Germany and all the rest of the nations who participated in the World War owe us money, and owe our citizens millions on defaulted war bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Reserving the right to object, I have an amendment on the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. This does not prejudice the gentleman's right to offer an amendment.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] is a very timely amendment. I have serious doubt that a single foreign nation who owed the United States a dime would be willing for us to purchase or obtain in any manner any valuable resource that they have.

As I understand the situation, there is very little helium in the world. Only about 1.8 percent of the gas that is usable is helium gas. All these stories we have heard about our great supplies of helium gas are simply fantastic, so I have been told, and that there is far less helium gas in America than many persons believe.

I wonder when a commodity is so rare and so useful if it is a wise policy for our Government to sell it to a country that only a few years ago was fighting our country. I wonder if it is a safe policy for our country to divide our national resources with Europe, which today is on the verge of anything except American friendship.

Now, these commodities that are rare and are useful for our Nation should not be divided with European countries. It is not a wise policy to divide them. Why not give it to Japan? How would you like to have Japan have this agreement that you are about to enter into with another country? How would you like to have any European country have the standing and status and privilege which this bill proposes to give to a foreign country?

It seems to me it is a very unwise policy for us to continue to play Santa Claus to European countries, continue to let their financial brains undertake to dominate American finances and our international bankers, and to continue to borrow from American banks and American institutions, and their war lords undertake to dip their hands into our American resources and get possession of them.

I believe it is a dangerous policy. I believe we should adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, today I rise for the first time in opposition to a report and recommendation of one of the major committees of the House, but I do so because I feel that if the bill as reported by the committee were to prevail, serious harm to our Government would flow from it. I have had experience in the balloon corps. I have seen a flaming balloon come to the ground, so I can appreciate very acutely the value of the helium we possess. Dispute has been raised as to its value in warfare, and question has been raised as to how many bags could be filled by the helium it would take to inflate the Hindenburg. The number 100 is correct. There are more than 7,000,000 cubic feet of gas in a ship the size of the Hindenburg, whereas these bags and sausage balloons that float over the lines have a capacity of about 91,000 cubic feet. The amount of gas necessary to inflate the Hindenburg is sufficient to fill the bags of four army divisions in combat on any front.

I am in thorough accord with the good-neighbor policy of the reciprocal trade agreements, but this has nothing to do with reciprocal trade. I say further that Germany is one of the great competitors of the United States. Our officials say that we have not yet begun to experiment with lighter-than-air craft. Germany will be our great competitor, and she is a country that has never regarded any agreement, any time, anywhere. Only a few months ago, in violation of every agreement, she sent her troops on the march. We all know what they have done. It is foolish to say here that they would be bound by an agreement to use it only for commercial purposes. Once the Hindenburg leaves these shores she is not going to come back to the United States and say to Uncle Sam, "Take your helium and fill your bags; you will need it in this war."

When a bag filled with helium is pierced by a bullet it does not explode, it floats gently to the ground without loss of life. They can patch the hole and send the balloon up again. We will find ourselves compelled to fall back on the use of hydrogen if we sell our helium to the nations of the world.

Furthermore, we cannot sell helium to Germany alone. If there is to be a good-neighbor policy we cannot confine its sale to Germany. What if Japan or the other nations ask for it? Can we refuse? Would they not ask: "Are you going to discriminate against us? Is Germany the only nation on the face of the earth with which the United States can do business? Is Germany, a country that has flagrantly violated every agreement she ever entered into, the only nation with which Uncle Sam will do business?"

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I say that if we support the O'Malley amendment we shall do something we shall not regret. If we support the Military Affairs Committee on this bill we shall regret it, for I do not think they have given sufficient study to this question. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—ayes 47, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKSTEIN: Page 6, line 13, after the word "regulation" change the period to a colon and insert: "And provided further, That no helium shall be sold to any foreign country which directly or indirectly engages in or sponsors distribution and dissemination in the United States or its Territories or possessions of any propaganda inconsistent, derogatory, or destructive to the democratic form of government of the United States and its people."

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the bill and has nothing to do with the sale and distribution of helium.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. No; I do not desire to be heard further on it. The amendment is not germane to the bill. That is all that can be said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised that the committee should raise the point of order. Here is a case where we are going to sell a quantity of helium to a foreign government out of which sale the United States Government will receive no profit at all; in other words, we are practically giving it away for no consideration. We are practically giving away one of our few natural monopolies, whether it be to Germany, Russia, England, or some other country, without consideration, selling these large quantities of this valuable helium without even the requirement that they stop spreading in the United States propaganda that is inimical to our form of government.

I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is germane because it deals with something directly affecting the United States of America.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. O'TOOLE. This government to which it is proposed to sell helium is already behind in its obligations to the United States.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; there is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. NICHOLS). The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] offers an amendment to subsection (b) of section 3. Subsection (b) provides as follows:

That helium not needed for Government use may be produced and sold upon payment in advance in quantities and under regulations approved by the President for medical, scientific, and commercial use—

And so forth. This gives the President of the United States discretion and authority to dispose of helium. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] places a limitation on the powers of the President, and says that under certain conditions the President will not be permitted to dispose of helium to those countries.

The Chair is of opinion the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is germane, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the Committee has voted down almost every amendment that has been offered. If the Committee is serious it can accept this amendment. As a matter of fact, under section 3, the United States Government is going to invest close to a million dollars in order to buy the plants of the independents. We already have invested eight or nine million dollars in this helium. We are practically giving the helium away.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that Germany is anxious to get this helium. Not since the Hindenburg disaster, and I am sorry for those in the ship, but, on the other hand, they had a lobby in Washington many months before to obtain this helium from the United States Government. I say we are going to lose money on this.

It is a well-known policy of the German Government to flood this country with subversive un-American literature and activities. It sends spies over here and it has flooded this country with such propaganda that is arraying one American against another and I beg of the Committee that they take heed.

I do not care how much helium you want to give Germany. I am not objecting to the sale of helium to Germany, but at least we should expect Germany to stop flooding this country with vicious propaganda against our people. I submit in fairness to the American people that the amendment I have offered should be adopted.

Mr. ENGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. On page 117 of the record of the hearings, Dr. Eckener testified as follows:

> As long as 8 years ago I had the opportunity of discussing this question here in Washington with Government authorities—

Which supports the gentleman's statement.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. The gentleman has no objection to this helium being sold?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. I would give Hitler enough helium to blow him up. But there ought to be some consideration for giving up this valuable chemical, and we should insist that they stop flooding the country with propaganda against you and the other people of the country and myself.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'TOOLE. They want this gas for the same type of airship that they used to bomb defenseless cities during the war?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. I do not care what the terms are upon which we give them the gas, but we ought to exact a condition which is fair, and make them stop flooding this country with propaganda.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DICKSTEIN) there were—ayes 32, noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Would it be in order, if I desire to exercise the privilege, to move to recommit the bill at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. That is within the province of the Speaker of the House and not the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey: Page 5, line 23, after the word "that", insert "no helium shall be exported for commercial purposes other than for casual replenishment in American airships: And provided further, That."

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, there is only one part of this bill that is controversial. We all agree this helium should be sold for medical purposes. We all agree it should be sold for commercial purposes in this country. The controversy in the bill lies in the export feature of it as far as commercial purposes are concerned.

If the amendment I have just offered is agreed to, we will not be able to export helium to Germany or to any other country. May I say incidentally that Germany is the only country at the present time that wants this helium. Germany is the only country, other than perhaps Italy to a small degree, that can use helium.

Mr. Chairman, I would like an answer to this question: If Germany had the monopoly on helium and we asked them to sell it to us, do you think that Germany would sell it to us?

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. When the Germans had a monopoly of dyes, they never refused to sell to any country, did they?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Exactly. When Germany had a monopoly of dyes, as my colleague says, we were never able to get any of those dyes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, yes; we were.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. No; we were not.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes. I said that Germany at no time refused to sell dyes to us.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I know what the gentleman said—Germany has leased dyes to us. Germany never has sold dyes to us.

Mr. KNUTSON. We can lease them the helium.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. We can do that under the present law.

Mr. GREEN. The nations the gentleman mentioned, Germany and Italy, are recognized today as the two most militaristic nations which threaten the peace of the world, and this probably is why they want the helium.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. May I say, also, there is a close connection between the American Zeppelin Co., the company which sent the lobbyist around to see us, and the Deutsche Zeppelin Co. We know an officer of the American Zeppelin Co. is also an officer of the Deutsche Zeppelin Co. This definitely proves that we are asked to pass this bill, not just so all the countries can get helium, but so that Germany can get helium. I looked up the stockholders of the American Zeppelin Co., and I find that 27 percent of the stock of the American Zeppelin Co. is owned by three international bankers. We know those same international bankers persuaded us to sell German bonds to our investors in this country. We sold these German bonds at about 90 cents on the dollar, and then Germany made a settlement with the American investor without asking whether or not the American investor wanted to agree to it. The settlement was made on the basis of 40 cents on the dollar and the American investor had to take it. Now Germany, through these international bankers, wants us to sell helium to her.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. THOMAS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PHILLIPS) there were—ayes 42, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the bill do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NICHOLS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1567) authorizing the conservation, production, exploitation, and sale of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense and to the development of commercial aeronautics, authorizing the acquisition, by purchase or otherwise, by the United States of properties for the production of helium gas, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 323, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. At what time is it proper for me to offer a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. After the third reading of the bill:

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit, which is on the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first endeavor to qualify Members of the minority.

Is there any member of the Committee on the minority side who desires to make a motion to recommit, and who is opposed to the bill? If not, is there any Member of the minority who is opposed to the bill, and who desires to make a motion to recommit?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin opposed to the bill?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. O'MALLEY moves to recommit the bill S. 1567 to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to report the bill back forthwith with the following amendment: Page 6, line 13, after the word "regulations", insert "Provided, however, That no helium shall be sold for any purposes whatsoever to any country or to concerns or persons in any country that is in default to the United States on the payment of any interest or principal of its World War debt to the United States."

The previous question was ordered on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—ayes 59, noes 152.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY and Mr. CITRON) there were—ayes 151, noes 78.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—MEMORIAL TO WILL ROGERS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval H. R. 6482, an act "providing for cooperation with the State of Oklahoma in constructing a permanent memorial to Will Rogers."

Will Rogers was a beloved figure in our national life, and I shared in full measure the admiration and affection which his fellow countrymen everywhere accorded him. He was for many long years my personal friend.

Yet it is in large part because of my personal friendship for him that I am certain that if he could speak he would be the last to desire the enactment of Federal legislation of this character.

The act provides for the designing and construction at Claremore, Okla., of a suitable permanent memorial to his memory. The type of that memorial is nowhere set forth in this act.

I am sure, as one who knew the depth of Will Rogers' love for his fellow man, that he would have desired a living memorial—something that would carry joy and gladness into the hearts of those he left behind.

With these thoughts in mind, I cannot forbear to mention Will Rogers' deep love of children. You and I who knew him through the years are well aware of his devotion to childhood. He contributed generously to the care of handicapped children and in providing education for boys and girls who could not afford it.

It is my thought, therefore, that the Congress at the next session may care to reconsider the form that a memorial to Will Rogers should properly assume. I believe the Congress, upon further deliberation, could devise a more appropriate means of perpetuating Will Rogers' memory which, at the same time, would be more in consonance with sound Federal practice.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 21, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN LANDS IN ARIZONA

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the Senate of the United States:

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
August 20, 1937.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2188) to amend section 3 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984–988), relating to Indian lands in Arizona.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of two members be appointed by the House to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the session and are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. RAYBURN and Mr. SNELL as members of the committee on the part of the House.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL ACT

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 7950) to amend the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 17, strike out "this subsection" and insert "The provisions of this subsection relating to notice by advertisement in some newspaper of general circulation."

Th SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAFETY ON HIGHWAYS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1226) to amend the act of May 3, 1935, relating to the promotion of safety on the highways of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 9 of the act entitled "An act to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes", approved May 3, 1935, are amended by striking out the phrase "in excess of $100" where it appears in such sections.

SEC. 2. Section 4 of such act is amended by striking out the phrase "over $100 in amount."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 8245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the conference report.

(For conference report see Senate proceedings, p. 9601.)

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition on the report. We bring you a conference report on the third deficiency appropriation bill, which is a complete report on all matters with the exception of the following three items: An amendment put on in the Senate to take care of the payments to the cotton producers in conformity with the understanding and agreement had between the administration and the representatives from the cotton-producing States. That being legislation, of course, had to come back to the House for a vote. We bring back for a separate vote an item providing for the acquisition of some sugar-pine forest land in California to be added to Yosemite National Park. An authorization for the purchase of that property passed both Houses of Congress and became law. The House Committee on Appropriations presented it when we considered the bill the other day, but it went out on a point of order. It has been reinserted in the bill in the Senate, and it is back for a vote. We bring back a small item providing for the expenses of delegates to the Interparliamentary Union. That being a change in legislation had to come back for a separate vote.

If the House adopts the conference report and concurs in the recommendations of the committee on these three items, then, so far as this bill is concerned, we are through with it, and so far as the third deficiency appropriation bill is concerned, Congress can adjourn and go home.

I wish to make a very short statement with reference to several of the major items in the bill. I do not wish to take up much time unless there is something about which some Member is particularly interested. There were several items in the bill which seemed to excite considerable interest in the House when the bill was under consideration. An item of $20,000 was inserted in the bill by the Senate for the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission. That amount is to enable the Commission to pay administrative expenses and discharge some obligations they have incurred. It does not contemplate any construction in the Tidal Basin area. The committee brings that back in the general conference report.

One of the matters that elicited considerable interest and that gave the conferees considerable difficulty was the estimate that came to the House for the beginning of the construction of the six naval vessels which were recently authorized. It will be recalled that an amendment was offered on the floor of the House and defeated by a small vote to insert that item in the bill. It was inserted in the Senate, and it was brought back in the conference report with an amendment permitting the Navy Department to go ahead with their plans and specifications, but not to lay down more than two vessels, or to contract for more than two vessels. I hope I may be pardoned for speaking in a personal vein, but I favored the inclusion of this amendment when the bill was in the House. Being in charge of the bill, however, I felt it my duty to protect the bill, and I did protect the bill and led the movement which defeated it. My personal views are that the vessels should be built. They are authorized by the Congress, and the Navy Department should go ahead.

My colleagues on the committee differed with me, and our colleagues on the Naval Affairs subcommittee felt they should be given an opportunity to go into that matter. I think there is great merit in that contention. We found the Senate conferees also had very decided opinions on this program, and after all debate up one side and down the other, we bring what we hope will be a solution to the House, and that is to permit the expenditure of a small amount of money on plans and specifications and to provide that they shall not proceed with the construction of more than two of the six vessels until the regular subcommittee of the House Naval Affairs Committee has had opportunity to have hearings on it.

An amendment was placed in the Senate providing for the acquisition of land for a medical center for the Navy. The committee felt that that could wait until the regular naval appropriation bill next session.

An amendment providing for $50,000,000 was placed in the bill in the Senate for payments under the Sugar Act of 1937. We eliminated that, except for some administrative expenses, leaving $250,000 in the bill until the need for these payments under the Sugar Act has developed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. TABER. That is, if the bill is signed by the President.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; we have provided that, if the bill becomes a law, and that amount will be available for administrative expenses.

We provided a small amount for the beginning of the operations under the Bonneville Dam project.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How much was that?

Mr. WOODRUM. One hundred thousand dollars, and we provide funds for the Cancer Institute, which has been authorized by law.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. How much is appropriated for the Cancer Institute?

Mr. WOODRUM. Two hundred thousand dollars for the purchase of radium and $200,000 for training and research.

Mr. MAVERICK. The amount authorized by the Budget was $750,000 for the first year, was it not?

Mr. WOODRUM. The Budget estimate was $400,000 for the first year. We left the Budget estimate, which was the Senate amendment.

We provided funds for the continuation of the apprentice-training project under the Department of Labor, about which a great many Members have expressed interest. This is a function formerly carried on by the National Youth Administration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman state the amount?

Mr. WOODRUM. About $50,000 is my recollection.

There was considerable interest expressed, if you will recall, about the Maritime Commission. The House reduced the authorization for building ships from $150,000,000 to $75,000,000. The Senate restored the $150,000,000, and the compromise in the conference was $115,000,000 which was $35,000,000 less than the Budget estimate.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. What did you do with the appropriation for $25,000 for national safety and accident prevention? You know, the deaths alone from automobiles it is estimated will run about 38,000 this year, an appalling toll.

Mr. WOODRUM. The committee allowed $17,500 for the continuation of that work.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Undoubtedly we can come back later for more funds.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am sure the lady knows the way back. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yesterday the House passed a bill authorizing the construction of Federal court facilities at Glasgow, Mont., and provided for an authorization of $100,000. As I understand, an amendment was submitted by the Senate and was written into the bill in the Senate. What has become of that?

Mr. WOODRUM. It was found upon investigation that the Congress has increased the estimate of cost for construction of the Federal court project to which the gentleman alludes, and that the Procurement Division already had the money, and the authorization to which the gentleman alludes made the amendment placed in by the Senate unnecessary. So that the Procurement Division can go ahead with the project without the necessity of retaining the amendment which was placed in by the Senate.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. In other words, the Federal court facilities may be built and paid for out of money heretofore appropriated?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Would the gentleman inform the House, please, whether or not the money appropriated for farm tenancy is in the report?

Mr. WOODRUM. Just as it left the House; yes.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. RICH. How much more is added to this third deficiency bill since it passed the House?

Mr. WOODRUM. All of the large Senate amendments were deleted and the Senate yielded on practically all of them. There were quite a number of projects placed in the bill in the Senate, for which there has been no authorization or Budget estimates, and practically, without exception, the Senate yielded on those amendments. The bill, as it stands now, strange as it may seem, is less than it was when it passed the House.

Mr. RICH. How could it happen?

Mr. WOODRUM. Well, we hope that is a good omen.

Unless there are further questions, Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I think this conference, insofar as it goes, is fairly satisfactory, everything considered. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has stated, this bill is several million dollars below what it was when it passed the House, when you consider alone the items that are covered by the conference report. If one of the three amendments is adopted, the money that will be taken out of the Treasury as a result of it will be better than $50,000,000 more.

Mr. RICH. When it came back from the Senate, before this conference report, it was a great many million more, was it not?

Mr. TABER. Oh, it was a hundred million more than it is.

Mr. RICH. Then this conference committee ought to receive the gratitude of the House for getting the Senate to realize that they ought to cut down on Government expenses.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the conferees did not see fit to agree on an item which was placed in the deficiency bill, providing an appropriation to complete the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

The Senate passed a bill providing for this appropriation. That bill came to the House and went to the Committee on Public Lands, where hearings were held. Along with the Tennessee delegation in the House, I appeared before the committee and urged the legislation. That committee unanimously reported the Senate bill back to the House. Of course, this happened within the last 2 or 3 days, and therefore we did not have an opportunity to get the measure before the House.

Most of you are familiar with the fact that the Great Smoky Mountain National Park has become one of the leading and most scenic recreation centers in the country. The Great Smoky Mountains are the greatest mountain mass in eastern America, and here the last remaining large tract of virgin hardwood forest is to be preserved for the benefit and enjoyment of the people who may visit this great reservoir of nature. The completed park will contain 450,000 acres and comprises the greatest variety of plant life to be found in any equal area of the world.

Mr. Speaker, there only remains about 26,000 acres needed to complete this great park. This is the first time that we have come to Congress and asked for an appropriation to purchase land in connection with the park. Over $9,000,000 has been spent by the States of Tennessee and North Carolina along with a contribution of $5,000,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation to buy this large area, and it seems to us but fair that the Government should make this comparatively insignificant contribution toward the completion of this great project. The Great Smokies are the oldest mountain range in the United States. This gorgeous chain of mountains meander through the park for a distance of 71 miles. For 36 consecutive miles it is more than 5,000 feet in altitude. There are 16 peaks more than 6,000 feet in altitude. Clingman's Dome, the highest peak in the park, is 6,642 feet, and the altitude in the park varies 5,800 feet. The number of species of trees in the park is approximately 150.

In this picturesque laboratory of nature mountain laurel attains a diameter of 82 inches with a height of 40 feet. There are yellow poplar 9 feet in diameter and other trees of equal proportion. There are approximately 1,500 varieties of higher plant life, including mosses, fungi, lichens, and algae, and 3,700 species of plant life. There are 202,000 acres of virgin forest. Verily the Great Smokies is indeed a botanist's paradise. While, under the parliamentary situation, you cannot help us today, but when Congress meets in January we shall earnestly hope for your support. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 8, amendment no. 24:

PRICE ADJUSTMENT PAYMENT TO COTTON PRODUCERS

Notwithstanding any other provisions of section 32 of Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, as amended, not to exceed $65,000,000 of the funds available under said section 32 in each of the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 shall be available (at such times and in such amounts as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine) until expended for a price-adjustment payment, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, with respect to the 1937 cotton crop to cotton producers who have complied with the provisions of the 1938 agricultural adjustment program formulated under the legislation contemplated by Senate Joint Resolution No. 207, Seventy-fifth Congress. Such payments to any producer shall be at a rate per pound equal to the difference between 12 cents per pound and the average price of seven-eighths Middling cotton on the 10 designated spot cotton markets on the dates of sale of such cotton, but in no case shall exceed 3 cents per pound. The bases for any such payment, or the amount thereof, when officially determined in conformity with rules prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be reviewable only by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 24 and agree to the same.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, this amendment starts a new farm program. On yesterday this House voted by a large majority to make a general and comprehensive farm program the first order of business at the beginning of the next session. There are many here who had hoped we could pass farm legislation at this session. One reason it was not done was because it was felt that further study should be given so that all commodities and all farmers might be included. Yet just the day after we passed that resolution, we have before us a new farm program applicable to only one crop, to cotton, proposing to set aside $65,000,000 to be paid to the producers of that crop as a subsidy. I do not know how those of you who come from the corn belt or from the wheat belt or from the dairy sections of the country may feel about that but I think you are going to have a hard time explaining to your farmers why we should pass a resolution one day merely promising them legislation in a future session of Congress and on the very next day should enact a program actually giving $65,000,000 from the Federal Treasury to cotton farmers. Every cotton farmer has received this year the same benefit payments from the agricultural conservation program as have been received by the producers of other agricultural commodities. Now we propose to give him this additional subsidy which will be received by no other agricultural group.

I do not know how you people who have been working for a wage and hour bill in this Congress feel about it, but I do not see why you should feel under any necessity of voting for a bill which is applicable to only one section of the country, when you have to go home and tell your constituents that you were not able to get a wage and hour bill in this session of Congress. [Applause.]

This amendment has not received the approval of either the House or Senate Committees on Agriculture. It has not even been considered by them or by any other legislative committee. It is not an emergency matter, because under the provisions of the amendment payments, while made applicable to producers of this year's crop, are not to be paid until the producer has complied with the 1938 program, whatever that may be. This means that it will be a year before payments can be made. We will be here in January to enact a general farm program. If the producers of cotton can make out a case at that time this program can be included in the general farm plan and payments could and would be made at the same time as proposed in this amendment.

I think the members of the Committee on Agriculture and other Members of the House will bear me out when I say that I have been friendly toward legislation for cotton. I want a bill brought out in January which will be eminently fair to the cotton producers of this country. At the same time I want to see a program which will deal fairly with every farm commodity.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Has this matter ever been before the Committee on Agriculture, or has the Committee on Agriculture been given any information with regard to this amendment which is now brought before us?

Mr. HOPE. I am sure there have been no hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of the House. This is an effort on the part of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate to write farm legislation. I think it ought to be written in the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there not the same demand and necessity for other farm products to have protective legislation passed at this session of Congress? Why should not farmers who produce corn, hogs, wheat, or any of the commodities produced outside of the South have equal treatment with the cotton farmer?

Mr. HOPE. They should have. In the gentleman's State, Iowa, there is just as much need to take care of the producers of corn as there is to take care of the cotton producers of the South. Certainly the gentleman is correct. If a cotton producer who gets 9 cents for cotton is entitled to a 3-cent subsidy, then the farmer who sells his corn for from 50 to 60 cents this fall is just as much entitled to a subsidy of from 15 to 20 cents per bushel.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Is it not a fact that the Administration now has the authority under existing law to lend money on cotton and other commodities without securing any appropriation?

Mr. HOPE. There is no question about it. We do not need to pass a single line of legislation to make loans. This bill provides for a subsidy above the amount which is loaned. It singles out cotton alone for this favored treatment.

Mr. HOOK. Does the gentleman know how much was used last year for all commodities?

Mr. HOPE. Last year approximately $440,000,000 was spent, and the cotton farmers got their share of that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, every Member of Congress who has been sufficiently interested to keep abreast of what has been happening around here in the last few weeks about farm legislation knows, of course, that a very persistent demand developed in the other body for some assurances that there would be protection for the cotton crop, which seemed to be the crop that was in particular danger. As a result, conferences were held at the White House between gentlemen in the other body and the President, and an agreement was entered into as to what would be done in carrying out a program to protect the cotton crop until Congress could pass appropriate general control legislation.

This amendment was not put on by the Senate Appropriations Committee but was put in on the floor of the Senate by gentlemen interested in the agricultural problem in the Senate and in the Nation, and it seeks to carry out the agreement and make it possible for the President to do what he told the gentlemen would be done with reference to cotton.

There is no reason why other legislation cannot come whenever it is needed for any other particular crop, but cotton is the crop that is in danger now, and that is the reason this item was brought in.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Has there not been the same demand and have there not been conferences with reference to other products of the farm? That is, they have appeared before the committee and before those who will act upon the question, and these people represented products just as important as cotton.

Mr. WOODRUM. If there were such conferences, they did not materialize and they did not get as far as this.

Mr. DOWELL. That is just what we are complaining of.

Mr. WOODRUM. Just because other projects equally worthy are not included is no reason for turning down a worthy project. The gentleman knows what the attitude of the President has been; that is, he would not go ahead with this until farm legislation was passed; but in order to take care of the situation this was worked out.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, coming from the State of Iowa, which stands first in the production of food in the United States, I not only was surprised but amazed to find we are going to have undue preference given to a commodity which does not deteriorate rapidly—cotton. When you drive through the South you see bales of cotton as large as a wardrobe trunk or a piano box out in the yard and sometimes the bales remain there a year or 2 years until they can be sold or stored, with practically no loss. Grain, especially corn, on the other hand, is a bulky commodity and more difficult to preserve. It is expensive to keep because it molds, dries out, and if held the storage charges are excessive. We have had a very abundant production of grain in the Mississippi Valley, but just because Members at the other end of this building did not get up and speak—not only speak but insist on grain loans for their people—is no reason why we in this body should forego that duty. I would feel that I was disloyal to my people if I did not protest against this discrimination.

The Committee on Agriculture has jurisdiction over this subject, over farm legislation. We were told in a resolution which was adopted yesterday that we would have a farm program for all major farm products and we agreed to such a plan. After we agree to the resolution this slick proposition is brought in here to prefer one commodity, which is not in dire need so far as storage and preservation is concerned. It is unfair to bring in a proposal to prefer one farm commodity above all others, when on yesterday in good faith we were assured that all these different activities would come up to the trough at the same time. I am not against cotton, but I am for corn.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any greater emergency confronting the cotton producer, who can sell cotton at 11½ cents a pound, than there is confronting the dairy farmer who is producing milk for $1.40 or $1.45 a hundred?

Mr. THURSTON. Certainly not, and the Members should know this provision will allow the cotton farmers to obtain 12 cents a pound, whereas the current market on cotton is somewhere under 10 cents—20 percent above the market. What a fine thing it would be for the Iowa farmer, or any other farmer, if he could sell his wheat, corn, and dairy products for 20 to 25 percent above the fair market value.

Mr. Speaker, this proposal is unfair, it is unsound; and if the administration leaders in charge of this program will keep faith with the House, they will do what they stated they would do yesterday when the resolution mentioned was agreed to. They will have all of these major agricultural industries come up to the committee which has jurisdiction over the subject matter and see that all at the same time are afforded equal consideration.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. If this proposal goes through, it will be the biggest steal that has ever been put over on American agriculture. It will segregate one crop of farmers in the United States and leave all of the other farmers, the dairy farmers, rice farmers, grain farmers, and the others, out on a limb, with no chance to get legislation, because you are enacting farm legislation for one large group of farmers and taking $130,000,000 out of the Treasury to subsidize them, while not giving the other farmers who need help the proper consideration they should have at this or any other time.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, we are being subjected here to a very clever piece of political highjacking. We were assured recently this subject matter in its entirety would be brought up, and after that resolution was almost unanimously adopted, one group comes in here and, not through the proper legislative committee, but through an appropriation committee, seeks to place on this bill a rider which has not been given consideration by the Committee on Agriculture, which committee in the past has been responsive to the needs of agriculture.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. All Members from the corn, dairy, and other farming districts, when they go back home, with this piece of discriminatory legislation passed, will have a lot of explaining to do.

Mr. THURSTON. Yes; and also we did not take care of their interests. Under the rules, this conference report cannot be amended. Our only recourse will be to vote down the report, send it back to conference; then corn, wheat, and dairy products can be included.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, this amendment should be voted down.

The funds available under section 32 are derived from 30 percent of the customs receipts which were set aside for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture to remove surplus agricultural commodities from the domestic market by diversion to relief channels, industrial uses, or subsidized exports. This fund is also available for payments under the domestic-allotment plan. Approximately $100,000,000 a year is derived from customs receipts for this fund, which was to be available to meet emergency conditions when price-depressing surpluses occur with respect to any agricultural commodity. The Secretary now has the authority to allocate these funds for any of the above-mentioned purposes whenever such allocation can be justified.

This Senate amendment would set aside $65,000,000 of the funds available under section 32 in each of the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 for the benefit of cotton. In other words, approximately 65 percent of this fund, which is for the benefit of all agricultural commodities, would be earmarked to pay cotton producers not exceeding 3 cents a pound, which is intended to be the difference between 12 cents a pound and the average price at which the cotton is sold.

The Secretary has the authority under the existing law to make payments to the cotton farmers as well as producers of other commodities without the necessity of this discriminatory amendment.

Furthermore, there is no reason why we should incorporate legislation in an appropriation bill. It is a poor policy. Had this amendment been offered in the House a point of order would have been raised against it. If you are going to let the other body incorporate legislative amendments affecting policy on appropriation bills and condone the action by adopting the amendments, you will be plagued from now on with future amendments from the other body tacked on appropriation bills. Such matters of policy should be given consideration in the legislative committee.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Is it not a fact that this amendment is an attempt to write a farm bill for the cotton farmers?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. That is the effect of this amendment which provides for the payment of not to exceed 3 cents a pound as a subsidy to cotton producers under the domestic allotment provisions of section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I am not arguing whether or not this should be done. I contend that if it is done other commodities should also be given equal treatment, and no legislation affecting policy for any agricultural commodity should be accepted on an appropriation bill. So long as this fund has been specifically set aside for all commodities, it should not be raided in this manner. There are commodities other than cotton which are in distress today.

An erroneous impression prevails with respect to the importance of one commodity as compared with the importance of others. Let me read this excerpt from the very able speech delivered recently in the House by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. JONES, in which he sets out the values of the various commodities:

First, dairy products, $1,796,000,000; second, corn, $1,556,000,000; third, hogs, $1,107,000,000; fourth, cottonseed and cotton lint, $979,000,000; fifth, hay, $870,000,000; sixth, cattle and calves, $868,000,000; seventh, wheat, $638,000,000.

Are you going to earmark 65 percent of this fund which is now available to all commodities and set it aside for cotton? This fund is used not only for the commodities I have just mentioned but has been used advantageously during the last 2 years to aid the producers of dairy and poultry products, cattle, wheat, citrus fruits, potatoes, and various other commodities, as well as cotton. In other words, if this fund is left available, it can be used for all commodities, and the Secretary, without the adoption of this amendment, can do for cotton what is intended in this amendment if such is justified.

Mr. EICHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. EICHER. Is it not likely, from the way the markets are acting now, that before Congress meets again the corn farmers of the Nation will need a subsidy just as badly as the cotton farmer seems to need it now?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. The gentleman is correct. The corn farmer should be entitled to equal consideration. When farm legislation is presented to this House it should be reported by the Committee on Agriculture, the committee which is vested with the authority and duty to consider legislation on agricultural matters. Such legislation should not come in on an appropriation bill, with no consideration having been given to it by the committee charged with that responsibility.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Does the gentleman realize that of all the agricultural commodities the one concerning which there is now the greatest distress and the most need is cotton. The price of cotton is lower than it has been in 4 years and is going down each day. This amendment is just a temporary measure to relieve the cotton situation. Does not the gentleman know that if wheat or corn should occupy the same position that cotton does now, those of us from the cotton States would certainly try to help them and give them temporary relief and the same treatment we are asking for cotton?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I recognize that, and I am anxious to help the cotton farmer, but I do not want this special fund, which is set aside for the benefit of all commodities, raided for the special benefit of only one commodity. The Secretary of Agriculture has been very generous in the allocations for cotton from this fund.

I urge you to vote this amendment down, so as to preserve this fund for the benefit of all commodities.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the Members of the House to a joker in this bill, and I call it to the attention of the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. This 3 cents is not a loan, but a subsidy. You get the 3-cent subsidy if cotton is 3 cents below 12 cents or if it is 3 cents above 12 cents, on the 1937 cotton crop. Read this amendment before you vote on it. This is the language:

> Such payments to any producer shall be at a rate per pound equal to the difference between 12 cents per pound and the average price of seven-eighths Middling cotton, on the 10 designated spot cotton markets on the dates of sale of such cotton.

If the cotton farmer holds his 1937 crop of cotton until June 1939 and he can hold it that long, and if during that period the situation improves so that cotton sells in June 1939, or at any prior date, at 15 cents a pound, it means that under this amendment the cotton farmer will be paid the difference between 12 cents and 15 cents, or a total of 18 cents a pound, when the 3-cent subsidy is added to the 15-cent market price.

I admit that was not the intention of the distinguished gentleman of the other body who wrote this amendment, but I do say, however, it shows the inadvisability of the Appropriations Committee trying to write an agricultural bill over there. [Applause.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman from Texas wants to dispute the accuracy of the statement in any respect, I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will permit.

Mr. BOILEAU. If it is on this point, I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. The language that the gentleman quotes is practically the same language that was used in connection with the stabilization of the cotton crop in 1935, and that cost the Government very little money.

Mr. BOILEAU. I submit to the gentleman that this language is very clear and anybody who can read the English language can see that if a farmer has 1937 cotton and has the means to hold that cotton, and if our agricultural program as referred to in this bill should bring the price of cotton up to 15 cents a pound on the spot market, undoubtedly, under the provisions of this bill, in addition to the 15 cents, he would get a 3-cent subsidy.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I wish to say to the gentleman that his statement is absolutely correct; and with reference to the statement of the gentleman from Texas about the language of this amendment being the same as the language used in 1935, I may say that that brings up the further point that cotton received approximately $45,000,000 out of this same fund in 1935.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] said that we have been talking about this matter for weeks in the newspapers. We have not been talking about this matter. We have been talking about loans, and that is all you have seen in the newspapers. You never heard anything about a subsidy, but here you have a direct subsidy that brings the price up as high as 18 cents with the spot market at 15 cents, and this is a 3-cent subsidy. I submit we have not been talking about such a subsidy for 3 weeks. This is something new and something the Committee on Agriculture would not have written into a bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think anyone in the Chamber who has served with me during recent times, or years ago, would ever charge me with being for a thing simply because it would benefit the corner of the United States in which I live. [Applause.] I am interested in cotton, of course, from a selfish standpoint, but I am also interested in cotton from a broader standpoint, I trust.

Cotton, in the years gone by, has been used to balance our trade with the trade of the world. I stand before you today and say that within the last 90 days, with a tremendous crop in prospect, cotton has already fallen $15 a bale. If loans, or subsidies, or whatever you want to call them, like we had in 1935 or 1936, are not inaugurated, we may expect to see cotton lose at least $30 a bale, which will mean that it is not worth gathering out of the field, which, in turn, will mean that the millions of dollars that would go into the cotton-producing sections, if we get this legislation to stabilize the price of cotton, will not flow into the channels of commerce in the United States.

Next year, in all probability, a great many of those people would be on relief in the cotton sections, and also the people who could not sell the products of their toil in the cities would again be tramping the streets looking for employment, for the simple reason that these millions of people in the Southland, in the cotton-producing sections of the country, would not have any money with which to buy. In other words, their buying power would be absolutely destroyed.

Let me say to the corn people, to the wheat people, to the tobacco people, to the people who represent those who labor in the factories in the cities, that a measure that is not unsound—and I do not think this one is—that is presented here to give buying power to the people on the farms or people in the towns, has had my vote during the time I have been called upon to vote, since I have been a Member of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KELLER and Mr. JONES rose.

Mr. RAYBURN. If I yield to the gentleman from Texas I must yield to the gentleman from Illinois, as he rose first. I prefer very much not to yield, but I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. Is not the same thing the gentleman has said about cotton prices also true of corn prices?

Mr. RAYBURN. If the proposition were made for corn that can be and has been made for cotton, I would be standing here making the same argument for corn that I am making for cotton.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. JONES. It so happens that I wrote the provisions of section 32 with my own hands and with the assistance of the committee. The provisions of section 32 are available for corn and available for wheat or any of the other major commodities. The only reason this is needed is the fact that so small a percentage of cotton goes into the domestic market. In other words, section 32 is a fund that is available for adjustment payments in an emergency on any crop on that part that goes into domestic consumption. Corn is practically all consumed in this country, so no legislation is needed for corn. Any of these funds are available for corn just the same without legislation. They are also available for wheat, because most of the wheat goes into domestic consumption.

The funds would be available for cotton, but they would be only available on that part that goes into the domestic market, which is between 40 and 50 percent. Therefore, in order to make it fully applicable to cotton, this enlarging provision or some such provision would have to be made. I prefer a general provision, but, as a matter of fact, it would have only been window dressing, because these funds are all available for corn or for wheat or any of them that come under the emergency. Eighty-five percent of the corn produced never crosses a county line. So when the proposition is presented that this is purely a cotton thing, it is not. Section 32 applies to all farm commodities.

Also the Commodity Credit Corporation may make loans in an emergency on any crop. It has funds available for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I thank my colleague for his very enlightening statement. Following up exactly what I said when I arose, that cotton was the one American crop that went into export trade, less than one-half the cotton that is raised in the United States is consumed in the United States, and corn, wheat, and these other products, as was so well said by my colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES], do not present the same problem that cotton presents.

I do bespeak my friends from the Wheat Belt, from the Corn Belt, from the Sugar Belt, from the dairy sections, that they go along with us.

Let me say to our dairying friends as I said to some of my friends from Wisconsin a few years ago: You people from the great dairying sections should certainly want to keep us in the cotton business and out of the dairying business. We can pasture our cattle for 11 months and a half in the year. We do not have to have expensive barns to put them in. Our pastures are green for 10 months in the year. Our cattle do not have to have as much feed as yours. Force us out of the cotton business and into the dairy business, which is so easy for us to go into, and we create a problem for the dairying sections of the country the like of which they have never known.

Let me repeat that if this proposition were for any other agricultural product, if it were for any class of people in the United States going into the millions, I would be here on this floor making the same remarks that I am making to you now. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Speaker of the House. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. As all Members of the House are aware, it has not been my custom since I have had the honor of being the Speaker of this House, except on very very rare occasions, to undertake to inject my observations or my judgment into matters of general debate upon the floor of the House, and I have thought very seriously about the propriety of my undertaking to say a word in connection with the pending issue. I have only summoned the fortitude and the decision to do it, my friends, simply because I feel that there may be possibly some misconceptions with reference to the urgent necessity for the people of my section of the country to have this authorization for a loan on their forthcoming production of cotton, and possibly to dissipate some misapprehension that may have been engendered in the House with reference to whether this was not undertaking to do a partial and particular thing for the cotton producers of the country.

Let me say this to you in the utmost candor and good faith, my friends from all sections of the country: I feel that if this present administration of ours has had one great all-embracing object with reference to its policies and to its recommendations it has been to undertake to secure stability as far as possible, and living prices for the agricultural producers of America regardless of the section from which they come. [Applause.]

I imagine that I know our problems down in my section of the country better than I know yours in the wheat country and in the corn country. Just a few years ago—it has not been a long time—the producers of cotton in the South found their product hammered down by virtue of successive annual overproductions to 4½ or 5 cents a pound, which meant absolute starvation to the men, women, and children on 2,000,000 farms in America. Your wheat went down to 26 cents and your corn down to 10 in some sections of the country, and your livestock almost to the disappearing point. This administration with our cooperation in all of these programs has brought up our agricultural situation to a status of some reasonable degree of prosperity, not where it yet should go.

Here is the dilemma now of the people down in my country. Remember, they are farmers just like your farmers, regardless of what they raise. The crop is growing and they are going to gather it. It is apparent that they have another one of the surpluses that could not be knocked out by virtue of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States invalidating the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Bankhead Cotton Act, but there they are waiting to gather the crops and take them to market. On the money they get they will have to depend all this winter for food, and clothes, and shoes, and books for the children, because it is their only cash crop. And here is a proposition that would make it possible for this administration to make them a loan on this cotton, that would give them a decent price—not much, but a decent price.

Now, listen to me, gentlemen. I do not want to make any unfair appeal to you, I am just trying to present the picture of a great segment, one-third of the farmers of the United States of America. That is our desperate dilemma for them.

If corn comes on with a big crop, as apparently you are going to have, and the price begins to go down, as has been explained by the gentleman from Texas, this administration—you know it—will not hesitate to make advances or loans on your surplus corn crop. If wheat gets in the same situation, you know, you wheat producers, the interest that the President has in sustaining the price of wheat and giving the wheat producers a decent price on their product. You know that they will not hesitate to make advances out of funds that are now available under that law for those purposes.

But cotton, as explained by the gentleman from Texas, is in a peculiar posture under the law; and upon reflection—and some things have been said here that possibly might lead to intimations not directly involved in this issue.

I want you men if such imputations have found any lodgment in your mind to cast them aside and consider the merits of this issue and this issue alone. Do not deprive the cotton producer of his opportunity, not to get an exorbitant price, not anything like the price he ought to get for this year's crop, but just a decent living cost of production, and that is all it amounts to. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I hope the motion will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOPE) there were—ayes 157, noes 93.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota and Mr. HOPE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 201, nays 127, not voting 102, as follows:

On motion of Mr. WOODRUM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, after line 23, insert the following:
"Yosemite National Park, Calif.: For the acquisition of certain lands, including expenses incidental thereto, as set forth in the act of Congress approved July 9, 1937 (Public, No. 195, 75th Cong.), there is hereby made available, not to exceed $2,005,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, heretofore earmarked thereunder for that purpose, notwithstanding the reappropriating provisions with respect to such unexpended balance in section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment and I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT].

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I am opposing this motion for a number of reasons. When the legislation pertaining to the purchase of the land set out in this amendment was pending before the House of Representatives and before the Committee on the Public Lands, it was represented and the legislation so stated, that no money would be taken from the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

We were informed that emergency funds would not be used. Yet this amendment proposes to take $2,000,000 from the emergency relief funds of 1937 to purchase some 7,000 acres of land to be added to the Yosemite Valley.

Mr. Speaker, the acquisition of these lands will close and destroy industries and will take 1,000 men from the industrial pay rolls. It will wipe out a pay roll of $1,000,000 a year. It will destroy $10,000,000 of invested capital and in addition thereto it will sacrifice $2,000,000 of emergency relief funds.

Permit me to read to the House a statement made by the chairman of the Public Lands Committee, that took place in connection with a discussion on this bill.

Mr. DOWELL, of Iowa, asked:

I am asking the gentleman where this money comes from.

The gentleman stated it did not come out of the relief funds appropriated by Congress.

Mr. DEROUEN. No. It was money to be used for an emergency. It was money set aside for land purchases for addition to forests and national parks. No new appropriations will be required.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact the sugar pines are 300 or 400 years old, and if destroyed, can never be replaced? This is one of the finest groves on the Pacific coast.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The gentleman's statement is only partly correct. There are 2,400,000 acres of similar lands in the State of California. There are 100 square miles of similar lands in the Yosemite National Park. There are thousands of acres of sugar pine in the forest reserves on the west side of Yosemite Park which can be added to the park without additional expenditure. All this means is the payment to a lumber company of $2,000,000 of emergency relief funds; in order to pay bankers now holding mortgages and bonded indebtedness on these lands.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact this forest is on one of the main entrances to the Yosemite National Park, and the forests of which the gentleman speaks are not so located?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The gentleman is in error again. No main highway runs through the lands under discussion, with the exception of a small corner of the tract and such lands have already been purchased by the State of California to protect the road.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman states there are 7,000,000 acres of land in this purchase?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Seven thousand acres.

Mr. RICH. Since the park is so large, what is the object of adding these 7,000 acres at a cost of $2,000,000?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. This appropriation will give bankers their money immediately. This is to be done at the expense of relief funds, at a time when millions of men are out of employment in this Nation and when every dollar should be made available for the protection of the unemployed in this country.

Mr. RICH. This is another steal of $2,000,000, then, by some defunct organization which wants the Federal Government to save its hide?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The Senate committee refused to place this appropriation in the bill, but an amendment was inserted on the floor of the Senate. I hope the House will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I realize it is exceedingly difficult in these last hours of the session to have matters given the careful consideration which they receive in the early part of the session, before we are all tired out.

Here is the main point about this amendment: Are we going to take $2,000,000 out of the relief appropriation to buy land in a forest for a national park? That is the issue. Is it not time we ceased to dip into relief funds for other purposes? Is it not time we appropriated our money for specific purposes and ceased deceiving ourselves by telling ourselves we are not taking money out of the Treasury, when we are taking it out of the relief fund and thus getting the fund in a situation where it must be replenished? Can we not begin even at this late date in the session to have an orderly government and an orderly method of appropriation, and can we not cease to use for something else funds appropriated for relief?

Regardless of whether this item is right or wrong, it ought not to be put through in this way. If we are going to appropriate money to buy lands for a park, we ought to appropriate money for that purpose directly out of the Treasury and not make a reappropriation out of the relief appropriation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Whose idea was it to hook this amendment onto the bill after it left the House of Representatives?

Mr. TABER. Oh, I suppose the Senate put it in, but that does not make any difference. The principle is right here. Are we going to dig into the relief appropriation for the purpose of buying land for a park and then have the relief appropriation so reduced next winter that it will not take care of relief? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, let me say, in the first place, this amendment does not take any money away from relief that was intended for relief. This is a part of the unexpended balances of the 1937 act, and is not a part of the $1,500,000,000 which Congress has appropriated for 1938.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. In just a moment. Let me state the proposition, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

This is a part of the unexpended balances, but they were earmarked for this purpose before the relief bill was taken up. They were not figured in the unexpended balances which Congress meant to make available for relief. If this were an original proposition, I would join with the gentleman in stating that relief funds should not be used for this kind of a proposition. I do not believe it should ever have been done. However, this money was allocated for the purchase of this land out of the relief funds of 1937; and except for a technicality in drawing the authorization to purchase these lands, which passed both the House and the Senate, this legislation would not have been necessary.

I yield now to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The relief item had expired prior to the passage of this authorization act, and we had appropriated this particular unexpended balance for relief in the relief bill along with the $1,500,000,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SCOTT. If this money is not used to buy this land, what happens to it?

Mr. WOODRUM. It stays in the Treasury allocated for this purpose.

Mr. SCOTT. It is not used for relief purposes?

Mr. WOODRUM. No.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman states this money is part of the general fund and will come out of the Treasury. I want the gentleman or any other Member of the House to show how you are going to get anything out of the Treasury when there is nothing in it. If you will look at the Treasury statement you will see you are $36,951,871,573.40 in the red. We have no money in the Treasury, so how are you going to get it out?

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman I know of but one way to get it out, and that is to take the "Rich" manufacturing company, which has made more money in the last year or two than it has ever made before, and increase its taxes a little bit.

Mr. RICH. I wish the Rich manufacturing company could be able to pay all the debts of the Government, but you are not only going to break the Rich manufacturing company, but you are going to break every manufacturer in this country; you are going to break every farmer; you are going to break every laborer; and you are going to break everybody if you do not stop this ruthless expenditure of Government funds.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. On the question of whether or not this money was appropriated for relief in the general relief bill, as I recall, the gentleman stood on the floor when that bill was before the House and added this amount to the amount then under consideration and stated that this was reappropriated for relief. If that be true, this money comes directly out of relief funds appropriated at this session.

Mr. WOODRUM. No; I do not think this money was part of the $223,000,000 that was reappropriated for relief.

Mr. DOWELL. As I recall, the gentleman stated on the floor here that there would be that much additional to the amount named for relief in the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. Does the gentleman mean to say I referred to this project?

Mr. DOWELL. Not to the project, but to the amount of money reappropriated.

Mr. WOODRUM. That amount was $223,000,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; and it was reappropriated.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, let me make this statement: No matter where the money comes from, this is one of the most valuable sugar-pine forests in America today. It cannot be duplicated, and this House could not do a better thing, no matter where we may get the money, than to buy this land and preserve these trees. If these trees were destroyed, as they are about to be, they could never be duplicated in the lifetime of any of us.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 165, noes 63.

So the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 52: Page 42, after line 8, insert:
"Interparliamentary Union: The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the Interparliamentary Union for the expenses of the American Group of the Interparliamentary Union made in the Department of State Appropriation Act, 1937, is hereby made available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1938. The certificate of the president and executive secretary of the American Group of the Interparliamentary Union shall hereafter be final and conclusive upon the accounting officers in the auditing of all accounts of the American Group of the Interparliamentary Union."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment, and yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is a reappropriation of some unexpended balances of funds for the Interparliamentary Union, a congressional and senatorial junket to Europe. I do not know just how much it is, but it amounts to about $10,000. I do not believe in this kind of thing. The appropriation is not authorized by law and I hope the motion will be defeated.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC AIRPORT IN VICINITY OF NATIONAL CAPITAL

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2838) to establish a public airport in the vicinity of the National Capital.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire if this is the bill authorizing about $4,000,000 for an airport for the District of Columbia?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. May I ask if the Committee on Military Affairs has given full consideration to this bill and held hearings upon it?

Mr. WILCOX. I was not present, but it is my understanding that the Committee on Military Affairs held very brief hearings on it in the early part of this week and, probably, considered at the same time previous hearings which had been held by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I object, Mr. Speaker.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by a clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a concurrent resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1481. An act to amend the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, to exempt persons traveling between Puerto Rico and the continental United States from the payment of a stamp tax on steamship tickets;

H. R. 3988. An act to amend the act entitled "An act conferring upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, southern division, jurisdiction of the claim of Minnie C. de Back against the Alaska Railroad", approved June 24, 1935;

H. R. 4399. An act authorizing payment for certain lands appropriated by the United States, and for other purposes;

EMPLOYMENT OF HARRY W. BLAIR

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1431) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the employment of Harry W. Blair as an attorney or counselor specially employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the conduct of legal proceedings appertaining to claims in behalf of Osage Indians for the recovery of royalties on oil produced from tribal lands, including all proceedings therein and any other case or proceeding, appellate or otherwise, that may arise out of or pertain to the right of said Indians to royalties on oil produced from tribal lands, shall not be construed to be employment within the meaning of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99).

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair inquire whether it would be possible to get an agreement to limit debate to 10 minutes on the side?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I think 20 minutes on the side will be necessary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] for 20 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the employment by the Attorney General of the United States of a former Assistant Attorney General, Harry W. Blair, of Missouri, as special counsel to represent the United States in certain oil claims in behalf of the Government, and also as guardian of the Osage Indians. The facts in the case are these: Mr. Blair, while he was Assistant to the Attorney General, handled most of the work in connection with these claims, and thereby became very familiar with the facts and also with the law in the case. After doing a lot of preparation work and getting the cases and the claims ready for trial he resigned as Assistant Attorney General and the work was turned over to special counsel. In the winter of 1935–36 special counsel resigned, and Mr. Blair had also resigned. The Attorney General of the United States now requests that he be permitted to employ Mr. Blair as special counsel, and that three statutes which are applicable to employees of the Government be not applicable to Mr. Blair by reason of his employment in these particular cases.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I want to say for the benefit of the Members of the House that Mr. Blair comes from my district, and, although he belongs to a different political faith, he is a very fine gentleman, a good lawyer, and, in my opinion, he would well earn the fee that is granted him by the provisions of this act.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman state how much money this man is to receive as special counsel?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. The fee is limited to a maximum of $10,000 per annum.

Mr. SHORT. These cases involve vast sums of money.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. ROMJUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. ROMJUE. They have entered into no contract, but the Government desired to employ this gentleman because of his experience and his qualifications and his knowledge of these cases.

Mr. PETTENGILL. How much is it going to cost the Government?

Mr. ROMJUE. That will be a matter that will be decided between the Attorney General and the counsel.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for a colloquy between my colleagues.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Is the gentleman prepared to tell this House how much, in his judgment, it will cost the Government?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I am prepared to say that it will cost this Government no more than a reasonable fee on the amount that is recovered by way of a judgment in these cases, with a maximum of $10,000 per annum.

Mr. PETTENGILL. A million dollars?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Well, I do not think it will be a million dollars; but I have full confidence in the Attorney General to limit it to a reasonable fee under the maximum.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. This procedure is not new. They have been doing it for years. The Republicans did it and the Democrats have done it.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. There are many precedents for this. In the Teapot Dome case, where special counsel was employed, millions of dollars were recovered for the United States Government and the fee was not considered exorbitant that was granted to counsel in that case.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman explain why it is necessary to pass this particular bill? The Attorney General now has the right, which he exercises, to appoint special assistants. A few days ago there was a list of the special assistants appointed by the Attorney General printed in the proceedings of the RECORD of the Senate, including, I believe, some 120 persons receiving compensation up as high as $9,000 a year.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I do not think I have time to go into all that.

Mr. MAPES. Why is it necessary to pass this particuiar bill to apply to this particular person?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. For the very reason that it would be necessary, as a good business proposition in the gentleman's business, to get the most competent counsel, thoroughly familiar with the facts and the law, to handle his case. That is the answer.

Mr. MAPES. As a matter of fact, it is proposed, is it not, to pay this gentleman more than the law now authorizes to other special assistants?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. There is no law which authorizes or fixes the fees in cases of this kind, but the maximum is $10,000 per annum.

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. If there is, then I am not familiar with it, except as to the maximum as stated above.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Yes; I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I state to my colleague and to the Members of the House—and I do not think I can be mistaken about it—$10,000 a year is the limit; it could not be higher under a contract in circumstances of this sort. If I am wrong, I hope the gentleman from Michigan will correct me. I think the House is getting confused on that point anyhow. Ten thousand dollars is the limit that can be paid by the Attorney General to this man as a special prosecutor.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I can confirm that by reason of the fact that the law provides that annually the Attorney General of the United States must send to the Speaker of the House a list of those paid from this appropriation. The list is referred to the committee of which I am chairman. Very few men have ever received $10,000. On the contrary, the average salary is around $5,500 or $6,000. I am sure my activities warrant me in saying I know something about Indian cases. In this instance Mr. Blair handled these very cases for several years; he knows the cases. If anybody else is required to handle the cases it will take him months and months to familiarize himself with the cases. This is a matter that will benefit only the Indians.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. That is true. The primary thing involved in this bill is simply this: The law as it now stands provides that when a man resigns from employment with the Attorney General's office he cannot within a period of 2 years from the date of his resignation take any cases against the Government involving claims pending at the time he served as an Assistant Attorney General. All this bill does is to provide that the 2 years shall begin to run from the date that Mr. Blair resigned as Assistant Attorney General and shall not be continued by reason of this special employment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This resolution has the support of the Department of Justice.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. It does; it comes at the request of the Department of Justice and was reported to the House by a large majority of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain this so we shall know what the situation is.

In the first place, so far as the salary is concerned, the limit fixed by law is $10,000 per annum. The amount to be paid is discretionary, but the committee was advised that this would cost $10,000 a year. The committee was advised further that the case would last for not less than 4 years and not more than 6 years; that it was a job running over a period of from 4 to 6 years, with a maximum possible fee to this man of $10,000 a year.

What is the purpose of employing this man? This man was a practicing attorney, I think, in the district of our friend from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], at Joplin, Mo. He came to the Department of Justice as an Assistant Attorney General in charge of abstract work—title work. My recollection is that his salary was either $8,500 or $9,000 as a full-time employee. After he had been here a while and had become familiar with the work in the Department he resigned and accepted this outside employment.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Is it not a fact that after Mr. Blair resigned from the Attorney General's office Mr. Richberg was appointed to handle these cases? Mr. Richberg later on found for some reason——

Mr. MICHENER. That is immaterial if it is the fact.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. It is very material.

Mr. MICHENER. Why is it material?

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. For the reason that when Mr. Blair resigned he did not resign for the purpose of taking this special assignment. After Mr. Richberg refused to go on with the cases, then the Attorney General made the request that Mr. Blair come in.

Mr. MICHENER. If that be true, there seems to be a misunderstanding, and the proof before the committee was entirely misunderstood.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Those are the facts.

Mr. MICHENER. We were told that this man handled these cases; that he is the one man in the country who is familiar with the cases; and that he has been with these cases from their beginning.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. That is true.

Mr. MICHENER. We were told that because of his familiarity it now becomes necessary to employ him; and that is the only justification, the only reason given at all why this particular man should be employed. It is my judgment that this man, like many others, came down here and was given a pretty good full-time job at $8,500 or $9,000 for a man who was practicing law in my friend's district in Missouri. But after he was here a little while he resigned, and it now seems necessary to reemploy him to handle one case at $10,000 a year over a period of 4 to 6 years, and he can be assured that he has that one client on which to practice law in Washington in addition to his other business.

If this was a new thing, it would be different. Possibly some of you gentlemen do not understand the situation.

There grew up here in Washington a few years ago the custom of men coming to Washington, going into the various departments—especially the Internal Revenue Department and the Attorney General's office—and becoming familiar with pending cases. In other words, those men had the benefit of the Government files. They knew of the pending cases. They knew more about some men's income than the men themselves. They knew more about the cases in the Attorney General's Department, especially in the Land Department, than anybody else.

Those men would retire from the service as soon as they got the information and open up a law office in Washington. They could and did send out letters to people throughout the country reading like this:

I have been associated with a certain office. I am familiar with the file in your case. You have a rebate coming. If proper suit is brought you could get a rebate on your tax return. If you will employ me on a 50–50 basis I can be of assistance. No results—no pay.

This condition existed and was discussed on the floor and, because of that condition, the Congress of the United States enacted a law providing that no one occupying one of these confidential positions with the Government could accept a case against the Government until after the expiration of 2 years from the time he left the Government service. In other words, when he severed his connection with the Department he could not bring a suit against the Government of the United States or practice law before the departments for a period of 2 years.

In this specific case Mr. Blair was employed in the Department of Justice and resigned. What this bill does and the only thing it does is to prevent the period of 2 years running against him from the date he resigned from the Department as provided by law. In other words, he resigned, we will say, on January 1 and would be prevented from accepting employment against the Government for the next 2 years. Under the law this period of 2 years will run after his $10,000-a-year special employment ceases. This bill waives the law so far as his present employment is concerned.

If this is a good law, then it should be enforced. The Department of Justice or any other department should not establish the precedent of violating a law by giving preference. This has become a custom of late. Yes; a precedent has been established, but we must not follow that precedent. The first precedent was on April 14, 1934, when the same thing happened in the same Department, and it has happened five times since. This is the sixth time.

I say the time has arrived when we should either repeal the law and let these men who come down to Washington to accept these Government positions and profit by all the experience they get in the Department, then go out and bring suits against the Federal Government, or else we should enforce the law. We should not train men and then let them resign and be employed at higher salaries as special counsel. That is all there is to this case.

This bill was introduced in February. It is not anything new. It should not be called up here for consideration in the closing hours of the session. No rule has been obtained for its consideration, and, of course, the Rules Committee would not grant a rule for the consideration of such a bill. The Speaker has refused to recognize anyone to call it up under suspension of the rules until now. An effort was made to call the bill up by unanimous consent. It has been on the calendar right along. We have been in session since 10 o'clock this morning and it is now 6 o'clock. The House is not in any condition to transact any business other than the settlement of pending matters before the House adjourns.

Why is this brought in? Possibly there is a lot of heat. This man wants the job. I do not know whether he is in the gallery or not. I do know that the man who appeared before the committee is the man who wants the job. The Attorney General did not appear, and he is the one primarily interested.

I admire my friends the Members from Missouri. They are all on their feet trying to get me to yield. They have undoubtedly been impressed with the belief that the Government might cease to function if the law of the land was not waived in behalf of their constituent.

Mr. SHORT. The Attorney General wants this man.

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, yes; the Attorney General has written a letter, or someone in his office has written a letter.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman has the letter from the Attorney General to the Speaker——

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. A rather unusual occurrence. Mr. Blair and not the Attorney General appeared before the committee.

Mr. SHORT. Which states because of his experience and his intimate knowledge of the case he should have the job.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; because of his experience and intimate knowledge, because he had charge of these cases in the Department, the Attorney General will have difficulty in finding someone to carry on. I do not doubt but that if Harry Blair died this minute the Government would go on without him, and I do not doubt but that the Attorney General would be able to find able counsel without violating the statutes of the United States or without coming to the Congress and asking for a special enabling act to permit him to hire any one man in all the United States to do this particular work for these Indians.

If anyone wants to ask questions, I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is this a legal question?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; there is a law against it.

Mr. RICH. It sounds illegal to me.

Mr. ROMJUE. May I call the attention of the gentleman and of the committee to the fact that the gentleman argues the case on the premise that lawyers go out of service with the Government and take cases against the Government. This case presents an entirely different angle. This is a case where a man wants to be employed by the Government and the Attorney General recommends it.

May I say further that I cannot recall a single instance where the Attorney General of the United States requested the employment of a man that such authority has not been granted. Go back to the time of the Teapot Dome investigation. Senator Pomerene was specially employed under the same kind of proceeding.

Mr. MICHENER. No; the gentleman is entirely wrong. The case of Senator Pomerene did not require any special legislation of this type.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Coolidge appointed him.

Mr. MICHENER. It does not matter who appointed him. Yes; he was appointed in the Coolidge administration.

Mr. ROMJUE. He was appointed by the Attorney General over a good deal of protest.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. He was appointed in spite of the Attorney General.

Mr. MICHENER. I may say to the gentleman that if he were familiar with that investigation he would know that Calvin Coolidge appointed Senator Pomerene against the advice of the Attorney General at that time; but that has nothing to do with this case. Of course, this bill will pass. The whip has cracked, and enough of the faithful are on the floor. This indispensable lawyer from Joplin can accept this annual fee for 4 or 6 years, and during most of the time may engage a legal practice against the Government. It is wrong, and it should not be.

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; but the gentleman must remember that members of the gentleman's party in the United States Senate did everything they could to prevent the Teapot Dome scandal investigation.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised to hear the gentleman from Michigan making the argument he does in view of the language carried on page 2 of the bill. What does page 2 state? First, go back to line 3 on page 1, reading "that the appointment of Harry W. Blair", and now turn over to page 2, "shall not be construed to be employment within the meaning" of the sections mentioned.

There is the United States Code. I just looked up the sections which are referred to in the bill, and which are the sections to which the gentleman referred. Under the terms of this bill, Mr. Blair cannot accept appointment under those sections. That is plain. It cannot be disputed. The Government is fully protected by the bill.

Mr. MICHENER rose.

Mr. COCHRAN. Now, just a minute. I think you will admit I know something about Indian cases. The gentleman knows I have been interested in Indian claims for a number of years. This is not a claim against the United States, but an effort of the United States to recover some money for the Osage Indians. Our treaty provides the United States must handle such matters for the Indians. This man was an assistant attorney general in charge of that division, and has handled this case for several years. If you bring in a man from the outside to take his place, how long is it going to take him to familiarize himself with the facts in the case? There is the situation entirely. This is a competent lawyer who understands the law, and the Indians will benefit if this bill passes. I repeat what I said a minute ago, that under the law there is a limitation upon what he can receive. Judge Sumners has confirmed that statement.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. It should be borne in mind that Mr. Blair under the terms of this act is taking a case not against the Government but representing the Government to carry out an obligation the Government must carry out under the treaty.

Mr. COCHRAN. For the Osage Indians. As I said, our treaty requires the Attorney General to represent them.

Mr. SHORT. Exactly.

Mr. COCHRAN. And it is solely to help the Osage Indians to recover money.

Mr. RICH. For whom; for the Indians or the Government?

Mr. SHORT. One of the best recommendations is that he comes from the Ozarks.

Mr. COCHRAN. Answering the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I repeat what I said several times—it is to recover money for the Osage Indians.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I shall take a minute to reply to my good friend, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. The gentleman quotes the law correctly, because the purpose of this bill, as the gentleman in charge of the bill will appreciate, is to do just what the gentleman from Missouri stated, that is, to exempt Mr. Blair from the operation of those statutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. No; just the opposite. Page 2 states, "shall not be construed to be employment within the meaning of" the sections mentioned.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not yield further.

Mr. COCHRAN. The sections mentioned deal with suits against the United States. This is not a suit against the United States.

Mr. MICHENER. He is exempted from the operation of that law. That is the purpose of this bill.

Attention was called to the fact that this is a suit in behalf of the Government. Remember that this bill authorizes the employment of this man to carry on a particular suit in behalf of the Indians or in behalf of the Government. The law prevents him from taking other cases against the Government for a period of 2 years. I do not want to change that law.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] such time as he may desire.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am going to see if I can aid the House in understanding the question the House is going to vote on in a moment or two.

This is the proposition as it presents itself to us. It does not make any difference whether you like the Attorney General or do not like the Attorney General; he is the man we have hired to take care of our law business. This is proposition no. 1.

The Attorney General comes to the Congress and says, "I have a lawsuit out here and am trying to protect the interests of these Osage Indians, and there is a man who is familiar with the suit, a man by the name of Blair, who had charge of it, and I believe he is the best man to represent the Government." Now, what are the facts? The facts are, he is familiar with the matter, and there is no dispute about it. Blair knows this case. There is also no dispute about the fact there are millions of dollars involved, and there is no dispute about the fact that the man we have hired to take care of our law business has asked us to give him a chance to hire the best man, in his judgment, to represent us. This is the concrete, definite proposition involved.

Now, what would you do if you had a lawyer hired to represent you, and he came to you and said, "You have me hired, and I have the responsibility of winning your case; here is a man I want to hire to help me"? What would you do about it? You would hire him, of course.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Does this abrogate a statute?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it does not abrogate a statute, but let me make this explanation. Frequently, we have found when a man is hired in a particular case we have to waive the general statute with reference to general employments. In other words, when you hire a good lawyer, inasmuch as the Federal Government has so much law business, you cannot get a good lawyer, ordinarily, to take such a case unless you exempt him from the provisions of the statute applicable to attorneys who are engaged in the business generally for the Government.

Mr. KELLER. What I am getting at is that this does, unquestionably, change the statute in relation to this man.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. And it is establishing a precedent, is it not?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know whether you would say it is establishing a precedent or not. We have done this many times.

Mr. KELLER. Then the gentleman is willing to change a precedent when he thinks it is good policy?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; of course.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Under the treaty, the Government of the United States must sue for the Indians, and that is the only reason the Government is in this case.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right. I do not know that I have anything further to say. I believe this is all there is to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLAND). The question is on the suspension of the rules and pasasge of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. MICHENER)—ayes 113, noes 18.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF JOHN F. HACKFELD

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 67) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the estate of John F. Hackfeld, deceased, with House amendments, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. BEITER, Mr. O'MALLEY, and Mr. CLASON.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the Philadelphia Co. for Guaranteeing Mortgages, indictments, and to insert certain letters and excerpts from committee hearings and documents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

SURVEYS FOR RUN-OFF AND WATER-FLOW RETARDATION ON RIO GRANDE AND PECOS RIVERS

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2688) to provide for preliminary examinations and surveys for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watersheds of the Rio Grande and Pecos Rivers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, this is a proposition to survey?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. TABER. What is the expense?

Mr. DEMPSEY. There is no expense that has not already been provided for. It comes under the Flood Control Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watersheds, including all tributaries, of the Rio Grande and Pecos Rivers, above the point of their confluence, in the same manner and to the same extent as is provided for those localities named in section 6 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936; the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of such section.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members of the Committee on Appropriations may have the right to extend their own remarks in the RECORD and include certain tables prepared by themselves.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

POLICE COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2909) to amend an act of Congress approved June 17, 1870, entitled "An act to establish a police court for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the court established by section 1 of the act of June 17, 1870 (16 Stat. 153), entitled "An act to establish a police court for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", shall hereafter be known as the city court of the District of Columbia: Provided, That nothing in this act shall affect the jurisdiction or function of the court.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Under the general permission heretofore granted to Members of Congress to extend their own remarks in the RECORD during this session and the week following, is it permissible to include speeches of anybody else other than a Member of Congress?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not permissible.

Mr. PETTENGILL. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Would it be in order for me to register a permanent standing objection for this session of Congress against the inclusion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a radio speech made last night by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. Has a request been made to include it?

Mr. PETTENGILL. No such request has been made as yet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman could not lodge any permanent and abiding objection unless it is presented to the Chair.

Mr. PETTENGILL. If it is offered, I will object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, of course, would have to be present under such contingencies to protect his rights.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from my home paper.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a statement on monetary problems by Mr. Siegfried, of Los Angeles.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FLOODS IN NEW ENGLAND

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 494.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regrets that the Chair cannot recognize the gentlewoman for that purpose at this time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, all New England feels very bitterly because this Congress is adjourning without taking any action on the compacts agreed to by the New England States in an effort to secure flood control. This afternoon other flood-control bills were enacted. Why should New England be discriminated against? Judge CLAYSON, of Massachusetts, is a member of the Flood Control Committee, and Governor TOBEY, of New Hampshire, is also a member of the Flood Control Committee, and they have worked very hard to secure the passage of the resolution approving these compacts. And I have been fighting steadily for flood control in the Merrimac and Connecticut Valleys. Mr. Speaker, the people of New England are living in terror of another flood like the one we had in 1936.

I believe this administration will sorely regret the fact that it has not helped New England, whose need is so great.

We are having an extremely hot summer. We are likely to have a very cold winter. If we have a cold winter and the ice in the lakes and rivers thaws and comes down we shall have a worse flood than we had before. Mr. Speaker, I have appealed to the White House about it, and I talked to the White House only today in an effort to secure action.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Russell Watson, of the city of New York, addressed to Mr. Sam Weismann.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at the point just prior to the passage of Senate Concurrent Resolution 18.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein data on the Westport River Dam.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein a story of the legislation in favor of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I wish I had more and plenty of time in which to answer the statement of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]. In the opinion of some of the Members of this House from parts of New England, I refer particularly to Connecticut, the New England compacts referred to by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, with all due respect to her—and I know she conscientiously believes in them—are an attempted steal by the power people. [Applause.] We think that for 999 years they are trying to take the birthright of the people of New England away from them. We are against the compacts. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEAD SETTLERS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 2888) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1937, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

"SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated an amount equal to the amount of the unpaid balance of principal and interest which the Secretary of the Interior may find to be due on homestead and other entries or purchases on opened lands of the Coeur d'Alene, Cheyenne River, Colville, Fort Berthold, Fort Peck, Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Shoshone, and Standing Rock Reservations, and the Chippewa lands in Minnesota opened in accordance with the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L. 642), on the date of the enactment of this act, less an amount equal to the amount of payments made on such homestead entries after the enactment of this act and before the appropriation herein authorized has been made. Such an amount when appropriated shall be placed to the credit of the Indian tribes of such reservations in the Treasury of the United States, and shall be available upon the recommendation of the Indian tribe or tribes concerned for making permanent improvements on lands of the Indians, including the development of irrigation and the granting of aid to individual Indians in establishing permanent homes, and for the purchase of lands on said reservations from individual Indians or from white owners, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and under such regulations as he may prescribe. Title to any land so purchased shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the respective Indian tribes and such lands shall not be allotted in severalty."

Page 3, after line 3, insert:

"SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall in no way affect the liability of entrymen or purchasers on such opened lands in the said Indian reservations to complete payments on their entries. Any payments made by said homesteaders after the appropriation authorized by this act has been made shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States. If any entry or purchase shall be relinquished or canceled on which the United States shall have advanced payments to the Indians of the reservation involved, said payments shall be reimbursed to the United States out of any funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said Indians."

Page 3, line 4, strike out "3", and insert "5."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to grant relief to homesteaders and purchasers of public and ceded Indian lands and to authorize advance of amounts due on delinquent homestead entries on certain Indian reservations."

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2010) to authorize the appointment of an additional judge for southern district of Ohio.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President hereby is authorized to appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate one district judge for the southern district of Ohio in addition to those now authorized by law. Said additional judge shall be entitled to receive the same salary payable in the same manner as is now provided for district judges in said district. This additional district judge shall reside within said district and shall be subject to the general provisions of law relating to district judges of the United States.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect immediately upon the approval thereof by the President of the United States.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

By unanimous consent a second was considered as ordered.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this bill would provide an additional Federal judge for the southern district of Ohio. Thirty years ago, in 1907, the Congress of the United States provided a second judge for this southern district of Ohio. Since then no judge has been added to this district. On the other hand within this 30-year period there has been a tremendous increase in the business and Federal litigation in that district. Let me give you this illustration: In the 3 years from 1933 to the end of the fiscal year 1936 the number of civil cases in that district increased from 525 to 961, exclusive of bankruptcy cases; in other words, within this time the business of the district almost doubled. Remember, in this connection, that during this whole 30-year period there has been no change in the number of judges.

Another fact illustrating the need for an additional judge in this district is that at the end of the fiscal year 1936, 2,860 cases remained on the docket, although the judges have been doing their work assiduously as is shown by the record. In that same year they disposed of approximately an equal number of cases. So, just taking the business that the court there must handle and the inadequate facilities for handling it, we have a picture which shows a conspicuous and crying need for an additional Federal judge.

Let me state this further fact, taking into consideration all of the districts in the United States where they have just two Federal judges, there are only two in which there is an amount of litigation equal to that handled in the southern district of Ohio. This district stands out amongst the districts of the United States as needing an additional Federal judge.

In the southern district of Ohio are three large and growing cities, Columbus, Dayton, and Cincinnati.

The first two-named cities have a resident Federal judge.

The city of Cincinnati, having a population within the city limits of one-half million, and in the metropolitan area of 700,000, has no resident Federal judge. It is the only city in the United States of the same or similar population that has no resident Federal judge. People residing in Cincinnati having business in that court must travel to a resident judge either 50 miles to Dayton or approximately 100 miles to Columbus.

Another fact which I wish to lay before the House is that the city of Cincinnati is located near the State lines of Kentucky and Indiana and on account of that location there is a stimulus to interstate commerce and to the kind of business that results in an increase of Federal litigation. So that I think a clear picture of the facts there show a plain need for an additional Federal judge in the southern district of Ohio in order to take care of the business of the courts efficiently and provide fairly for the people who reside in that district that have business with the courts.

The Attorney General of the United States has expressed his recommendation in support of this additional Federal judge. The House Judiciary Committee carefully considered the matter through a subcommittee and through the full committee and have favorably reported the bill.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McSWEENEY. We of Ohio want to thank the gentleman for his very able presentation of a great need in southern Ohio. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the metropolitan area of Cincinnati because so much of the population lives across the Indiana-Kentucky State line does not definitely show the amount of business and the corporate set-up of the great metropolitan area of Cincinnati. I feel that the people of Indiana and Kentucky will realize that many of their citizens have business in Cincinnati, which would naturally be the domicile of their legal operations.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DIXON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time I have addressed you from the Well of the House. I am asking this special privilege simply because Cincinnati, being one of the greatest cities of the whole United States, one of the best taxpaying cities in the whole United States, is asking for a resident judge.

We in Cincinnati are proud of everything that is American. Cincinnati is one of the proudest American cities in the United States, and I am going to ask my colleagues to give us this judge. I am sure the city of Cincinnati will always do what it can in the way of paying its compliments to the great Congress of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the length of time I take on this measure depends upon the order in the House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman ield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are getting to the closing hours of the session and we are anxious to expedite these matters. I hope we may remember this and proceed in order.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, in reference to this bill I take the position that we have a Judicial Council and the Attorney General of the United States—agencies which the Congress set up and created—to recommend when and where Federal judges are needed. Wherever and whenever these agencies so recommend, then it is my position as a member of the Judiciary Committee that I go along with these recommendations in every case. My colleagues know that. I opposed an additional judge in my own district at one time because there was no recommendation of the council. I am opposing one now in my own circuit and the gentleman who is the author of the bill I am sure will not call it up for consideration under existing conditions. Why? Because the Judicial Council has not made the recommendation. Some of you do not know what that is.

A few years ago, when the Republicans were in power, we had a lot of these political judges proposed. We had Senators who wanted judges and we had Congressmen who wanted judges. The Congress set up what we thought was a nonpartisan judicial tribunal, composed first of the presiding judge of each circuit in the United States and the Attorney General of the United States, acting as a sort of adviser. They meet in Washington in September each year and canvass the situation existing in the respective circuits and districts. When they report the necessity or the desirability for a new judge, your committee always favorably reports it. I am sorry to say that sometimes of late, when pressure is brought to bear, whether it be political pressure or whatnot, we report bills such as this without that kind of recommendation.

Mr. Speaker, this judicial council meets in September. This judge cannot be appointed before the Congress adjourns. We are going to be back here in January, if not before. The judge could not function anyway before that time. If the proper authority recommends it, I believe we should have the judge. But you are losing no time. There is not any question about that.

There were two reasons suggested to the Committee for this judge, one by Senator BULKLEY and the other by Mr. Keenan, Assistant Attorney General. The Senator's reason was based largely on the fact that Cincinnati, as a city, does not have a judge. Well, now, Cincinnati does not, but the reason is that when a judge was appointed for that district he just did not happen to reside there. He resides 65 miles away at Dayton.

My good friend the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. O'BRIEN, made a splendid presentation of this matter. I understand it was his maiden speech and I applaud him. He presented every fact that could be presented, as well as a lot of conclusions. With many of those conclusions I do not agree. He called our particular attention to the number of cases and the increase in the last 3 or 4 years, or since 1933, as well as to the number of cases not disposed of.

Do not forget there are two judges in this district now. Our former colleague, Mel Underwood, is one of the new judges. He does not live in Cincinnati. This same Senator might have taken care of Cincinnati when he was named. They did not have a judge there but he was appointed. He lives up in Columbus. He is a good man and he is doing well. Judge Hough, his predecessor, was sick for 2 or 3 years and the cases have accumulated. Judge Underwood is cleaning up the calendar, and if you leave Judge Underwood alone, President Roosevelt's theory will be carried out that we should not have judges where we do not need them, that there should be a reassignment as far as judges are concerned, and that they should be assigned where they are needed and where they can do the work, regardless of what some local community may want in the way of having a resident judge. The calendar is being cleaned up. Let this matter stand until January and then if the Attorney General of the United States and the council believe there should be such a judgeship created, there will be no question about it in this House, I am sure. But why rush this through now? Why wait until the last minute, just before we adjourn? We are staying here just because we are waiting on some conference reports. If those reports were in here, this bill would not be here. I believe these bills are important enough that they should not be brought in at this hour, when two-thirds of the Members have gone home, when the Members are not in the city. Let us not create any more judgeships until the committee, which you have established during the last week to survey this matter during the coming summer, under the lead of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], our splendid chairman, brings in to you next January, or in that session of Congress, a recommendation as to where we need judges, as was so well suggested by the gentleman from Texas the other day. It may develop when this careful study is made that some of these places may not need judges. Let us not appoint another judge when we do not know whether or not we need him, just because somebody wants a resident judge.

You might think there was no judge in Cincinnati at all. There are more terms of court held in Cincinnati than in any other city in that judicial district. One of the judges a~e there much of the time. The fact the judge lives 65 miles away and goes home week ends does not entitle the city to another judge simply because that city has a certain population.

You cannot judge these matters by the number of cases and you cannot go by population. The State of Arizona, with a population of about 60,000, has two Federal judges, you gave it another one last year. All these judges are not needed, and the creation of the additional judgeship was not recommended by the counsel. However, in a time like this you put it through. Now, are you going to create another judgeship when there is no reason for it and when there is no necessity for it?

As far as cases are concerned, when my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. O'BRIEN] has been on the Committee on the Judiciary as long as I have, he will learn that cases do not mean anything. There are some courts in the country which last year had hundreds of cases on the calendar, but some of these cases were draft-evader cases arising from the World War which will never be tried, and the cases are carried along on the calendar because they may be helpful if it is desired to get another Federal judge. Some of the cases are deportation cases, which will never be tried, yet they are recorded as part of the business of the court.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman suggests we wait until January and then bring in a bill for a judgeship. What is going to be done with the congested court calendar in the meantime?

Mr. MICHENER. This proposed judge cannot be appointed and confirmed at this session of Congress anyway. He could be of no service before January. I am not going to refer to the political fight in Ohio about this appointment. I do not live in Ohio. I have reference to any controversy among the majority party. The Republicans have nothing to say about who the appointees are. The only question the Congress should consider is the necessity for this new $10,000 a year judge and the additional expense of his necessary assistants and staff.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I happen to live in this judicial district. Before coming to Congress I had considerable practice before the Federal judges in that district. In answer to the argument made by the distinguished Member from Michigan, let me say that if the docket in this district was so congested through Judge Hough's having been sick for about 2 years, why did not the Attorney General and the Judicial Council so state when they met in September of 1936 or 1935? Last September they passed that situation over and made no recommendations concerning it. If there was such an urgent need why has it not been shown before this time—the last 5 minutes of this session of Congress?

The docket is not congested to the extent that it was when Judge Underwood took the bench last year. Judge Underwood has cleaned up more than half the cases which were on his docket. In another year Judge Underwood will be out of the woods as far as that docket is concerned.

Measured by the work done in some other districts, it may be that there is more work in that district than in some others, but why the sudden notion. I think it can be ascribed to the desire of someone to build up his political fences at the expense of the Federal Treasury. The fact the other judge is located in Dayton and not in Cincinnati does not mean anything.

Every other Federal judge as far back as I can remember was located in Cincinnati, and it was time to let one be appointed from Dayton.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat this bill may be justified from the standpoint of need, but it is not justified until the Judicial Council states a new judgeship is necessary. This is one of the reasons I am against the bill: I have several other reasons—why was not this bill introduced by some Congressman? There are about 35 counties in Ohio in this judicial district. No one appealed to a Congressman to introduce this bill; why not? Why must this come to us from the Senate? We in Ohio have two Senators, as do all other States, and it so happens that one of our Senators is located in the north and the other in the south. The Senator who lives in the southern part of the State did not introduce this bill. Why was he not asked to do it by the lawyers and those personally interested? This bill was introduced by the Senator from the northern part of the State, where they have five or six Federal judges. For what reason was the bill introduced? That is my chief objection. This bill has been introduced to reward someone for faithful political service rendered and to be rendered.

I think I can say to the Members from Ohio with considerable certainty that the man who is going to get this place has already been selected, and not a single one of you has been consulted. There are 8 to 10 of you, but not a single one of you has been consulted. Why do you not stand up as a Congressman representing respectable constituencies and demand your rights and demand recognition for the splendid lawyers in your districts? That is what I am doing. Of course, being a Republican, I cannot expect the recognition that you can expect. I am demanding consideration for the fine Democrats in my district. I have the finest Democrats in the world in my district.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. JENKINS. Not now.

Why are you permitting someone from way up on the Lakes to come down to southern Ohio and pick a judge for you? Now, how do I know this judge has been picked? Let me tell you about the testimony before this great Judiciary Committee. Testimony was given by this representative of the Attorney General, Joe Keenan, and all you Democrats know him, because he has been to see you about a good many things. He is the gum-shoe man that you all know. He it was who appeared before the Judiciary Committee and he tells the Judiciary Committee he will guarantee that this judge will come from one certain county. Who elected him? Nobody! Then why do you allow him to tell you who will be appointed? Apparently he is the agent designated to "pack" the district court. This appointment should be open and above board. No packing should be permitted.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in this kind of business. There was in my office today a fine Democrat from this judicial district, a candidate for this place, from one of the rural counties. He is a man of respectability. He has the endorsement of the members of the Democratic executive committee, as well as the Democratic central committee of more than half of the counties in the district. But what is that going to avail him? I told him this morning, "My good friend, you might as well go back home, because this job has been promised." It has been promised by the representative of the Attorney General; and to whom? To a man who has a political obligation due him and this is the way they are going to pay it. The people will not be considered; the many fine lawyers who support the Democratic tickets are to be pushed aside. It is not right; it is not fair, and if you persist in it you will rue the day.

This proposition can wait until next January. Let us allow it to go over until that time. Then these Democratic Congressmen can get together, pick us a judge, and whoever they pick will be satisfactory to me. A hand-picked judge will not suit our people. Mr. Keenan might select the judges for the northern district but we would prefer that the good Democrats in the southern district make their own selections for our district. [Applause.]

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a few words. I laid before the House in my first statement the real facts and merits involved in this case, and I am surprised that gentlemen on the other side have based their arguments on something entirely apart from the business before the House. I did not give any ancient statistics about draft evaders or anything of that sort. In the years from 1933 to 1936, there was an increase in civil cases from 525 to 961, and at the end of last year there were 2,860 cases left on the docket of the court.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan. In just a moment.

This is not a case, as stated by my colleague from Michigan, of a Congressman trying to get a judge. I do not live in the State of Ohio. This matter is being presented impartially, on account of the merits in the case as it was laid before the House Committee on the Judiciary. It has been recommended by the Attorney General of the United States and his letter is attached to the report filed in this case.

Furthermore, the House Judiciary Committee has approved it by an almost unanimous vote.

The gentleman from Ohio suggests that we should wait until a certain council of judges tells us we should pass such legislation, but the matter of providing Federal judges for our courts is a prerogative of the legislative branch of the Government. This is our function and we have no constitutional right to abrogate our functions with respect to providing judges for our Federal judiciary. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCORMACK). The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AIRPORT FOR THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2838) to establish a public airport in the vicinity of the National Capital.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a public airport for the purposes of the United States and the District of Columbia shall be developed by and under the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of War on a site south of the road leading from Camp Springs to Meadows, in Prince Georges County, Md., which has been selected and recommended by the "District of Columbia Airport Commission" under authority of the act of April 21, 1936 (49 Stat. 1236), entitled "An act to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia."

The Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to acquire by purchase, or condemnation under and in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation of land for sites of public buildings, and for other purposes", approved August 1, 1888, as amended (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 257), an area not exceeding 2,500 acres of land on which to locate this public airport. Any land or property now belonging to the Government of the United States, or any department thereof, which may be included in the site selected is hereby transferred to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War, so that it will be available for airport purposes.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,286,250 for the acquisition of land and the development of the airport contemplated herein, including the clearing of land, grading, construction of runways, construction and installation of buildings and appurtenances thereto, including interior facilities, fixed, movable and office equipment, necessary services, roads, water supply, sewers, sewage disposal, connections to gas and electric mains, purchase and installation of telephone and radio equipment, and similar improvements, and procurement of transportation incident thereto, without reference to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 1339; title 40, sec. 267), including general overhead expenses of transportation, engineering, supplies, inspection and supervision, travel connected therewith, and such services as may be necessary in the offices of the Secretary of War; and the engagement by contract or otherwise without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), and at such rates of compensation as the Secretary of War may determine, of the services of architects or firms or corporations thereof and other technical and professional personnel as may be necessary; to remain available until expended.

When, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, the development of the said airport shall have been completed as contemplated within the amount of funds provided in this act, he shall transfer all property, control, and jurisdiction thereover to the Secretary of Commerce, who is hereby empowered to maintain and operate said airport, notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 of the Air Commerce Act of May 20, 1926 (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 175).

The Secretary of Commerce shall, with due regard to existing law and the functions of other Government departments, make reasonable regulations and establish charges, fees, and tolls for the use of such airport; fix penalties for the violation of said regulations; and establish liens to enforce payment of said charges, fees, and tolls.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is entirely proper to state at this juncture that the Senate of the United States having adjourned sine die, under the concurrent resolution adopted, it would be entirely nugatory for the House to take any further action to night upon any bill or any other legislative proposition, for the reason that the Senate, having adjourned sine die, it would be impossible for any message to be received by the Senate with reference to any action taken by the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. The bill providing for an additional judge for the southern district of Ohio passed the House a few minutes ago. It passed the House after the Senate had adjourned sine die. That was the inquiry I was going to submit a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information as to whether or not the bill referred to by the gentleman from Michigan was received by the Senate and acted upon before its adjournment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. If that bill were not received by the Senate through message from the House and acted upon by the Senate, the bill would be delayed until the next session, would it not?

The SPEAKER. That is not a matter that the House can decide. That would be a matter that the Senate of the United States should decide.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed to join the committee of the Senate to inform the President that the Congress was ready to adjourn and ask him if he had any further communications to make to the Congress, has performed that duty.

The President has directed us to say that he has no further communication to make to the Congress.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House on both sides of the aisle, we are about to adjourn an historic session of the Congress of the United States. I have the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD. This I shall do, but as a preface to that I want to say in defense of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-fifth Congress against all enemies foreign and domestic [laughter and applause] that this has been one of the working Congresses in which I have served, and that when anybody, foreign or domestic, says that this session of Congress has been a sit-down Congress, that it has not worked and that it has not enacted a great program of legislation, they either are ignorant of the facts, or they want to distort them.

I shall extend my remarks in the RECORD by placing in the RECORD the bills, major and otherwise, that have been passed by this session of the Congress, and I feel confident that those who read them will find that it is an imposing record.

Before I take my seat, Mr. Speaker, to you, sir, I want to express my deep thanks for your courtesy, for your cooperation, for your sympathy.

For more than 20 years you and I have been bosom friends, but in the last few months there has been added to that a deep respect of you as a man, of your great ability, of your patriotism; and I think that I speak the minds and the hearts of the Members of this House on both sides of the aisle when I say that your record thus far and the record that you will make in the future will mark you as one of the outstanding and one of the great Speakers of this House. [Applause, the Members rising.]

And to you my friends on my right and on my left, to the minority leader who has been kind and fine, outstanding, and protecting the interests of his party and carrying out his conception of protecting the interests of the country, he has been cooperative and he has been fine; to the chairman of every committee on my right, and to the members of those committees who have been so kind and fine, willing to consult with me at all times on their problems, and give me their fine cooperation, I thank you.

My service in this body with its wonderful associations is one of the grand things that I shall remember as long as I live, either in public life or in retirement, which I hope for sometime pretty soon down on the farm in the great State of Texas, when this fitful fever is over and I can pillow my head upon grass, or feathers, or whatever it is, in Texas. For 24½ years I have been here. Every year of my life my esteem of the Congress and the Members who compose it has risen. I love this place. It is a part and parcel of my life.

And to every one of you, as you go forth from here, I wish that you may enjoy a vacation filled with happiness and peace. God bless you and keep you every one. [Applause, the Members rising.]

COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following very gracious message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

The honorable THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.:

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Before the adjournment of the Congress will you be good enough to extend to the Members of the House of Representatives my regards and good wishes?

I hope that during the coming months all of you will have a pleasant and a happy vacation.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

DISAPPROVAL OF HOUSE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS SUBSEQUENT TO SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The President of the United States, subsequent to the final adjournment of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives a list of House bills and House joint resolutions disapproved by him, with his reasons for such action, as follows:

On August 25, 1937:

COMPLETE INDEPENDENCE OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

H. R. 7561. "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes', approved March 24, 1934."

I have withheld approval of this act for the reasons given in the following memorandum filed by the Secretary of War:

The repeal of the last sentence of section 8 (a) (1) of the act referred to would stop the immigration into Hawaii of Philippine workers for Hawaiian industries under the exceptional conditions provided for their entry by the act as it now stands. It would also subject such workers desiring to enter Hawaii to the quota and other restrictive provisions of the immigration laws. In this connection it is understood that there is no present need of immigration from any source into Hawaii, and that Hawaii has had no occasion to take advantage of the provision of section 8 (a) (1) of the Independence Act. However, it is suggested that since that act establishes the basis of the Philippine-American relations during the Commonwealth period, as fixed by our statutes and accepted by the Philippine people, a unilateral modification of the Independence Act, particularly one canceling a privilege accorded Philippine citizens by the act, made without obtaining the formal concurrence of the Philippine authorities, might offend the Philippine people. Moreover, it would seem desirable, for the present at least, that any change in the act should await the report and recommendations of the joint preparatory committee of American and Philippine experts now studying Philippine affairs, including the question of immigration.

CHANGING THE DESIGNATION OF CERTAIN AVENUES IN THE MALL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

H. J. Res. 171. I have withheld approval of House Joint Resolution No. 171, entitled "Joint resolution for the designation of certain streets or avenues in the Mall as Ohio, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Maine Avenues."

The purpose of House Joint Resolution 171 is to name the four avenues in the Mall running parallel to each other east and west in honor of the States of Ohio, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Maine. These avenues in the past were designated as drives and named after the first four Presidents. They were designated Washington, Jefferson, Adams, and Madison Drives and signs erected.

There are several considerations which move me to withhold my approval of House Joint Resolution 171.

The naming of these Mall roads as avenues would result in a complete change in the policy established by Thomas Jefferson when the city was laid out by L'Enfant. Jefferson named the diagonal avenues after the Thirteen Original States and the rectangular streets were lettered and numbered. Moreover, the Mall drives are in no sense city streets but are park roads, none of which has ever been given State names. The National Capital Park and Planning Commission felt that it would be more appropriate to name the Mall drives after the first four Presidents whose names are so closely associated with the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, already memorialized by the act of Congress in so naming the two avenues bounding the Mall.

I suggest that the States of Ohio, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Maine be honored by changing the names of certain diagonal highways in the District of Columbia as follows:

For Ohio Avenue, rename Concord Avenue and Riggs Road.

For Oklahoma Avenue, rename Benning Road or Nichols Avenue.

For Maine Avenue, rename Reno Road.

For Missouri Avenue, rename Linnean Avenue.

Under this set-up the two States of Maine and Missouri would be paired as they were in the Mall, a relationship which the congressional representatives from those States thought important to perpetuate. As alternatives for Maine and Missouri Avenues, I also suggest that Water Street might be renamed Maine Avenue and that Potomac Avenue could be renamed Missouri Avenue. The surveyor of the District of Columbia has been contacted and sees no objection to a change in these existing street names.

For the reasons which I have set out herein I am convinced that House Joint Resolution No. 171 should not become law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

On August 30, 1937:

WALTER W. JOHNSTON

H. R. 2860. I am withholding my approval of bill H. R. 2860, entitled "An act for the relief of Walter W. Johnston."

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Walter W. Johnston, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,495 for personal services claimed to have been rendered to the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and for the use of appliances personally owned and operated by him in connection with the launching of ships for the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation for carrying on the war.

The record in this case shows that the claimant was fully compensated for his personal services and for the use of his devices for launching ships, by virtue of a decision of the Court of Claims rendered on April 30, 1930, wherein it was determined that the fair and reasonable compensation for the services rendered by the claimant in this connection was $20,000, and that he had received approximately $5,495 to apply on his compensation. The court therefore rendered a judgment in favor of the claimant in the sum of $14,505, which judgment was paid by the United States on September 6, 1930.

In the light of the record in this case, which discloses that the claim of Walter W. Johnston has been fully litigated and a judgment had and paid for the fair and reasonable value of the services rendered, I do not feel justified in approving this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

RED LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA

H. R. 4539 would authorize a per-capita payment of $25 to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation.

The Acting Secretary of the Interior advises that (a) a large number of the old people are being provided for under the Social Security Act; (b) that employment opportunities are plentiful for able-bodied Indians in road and emergency conservation work; (c) that to provide labor to conduct timber operations on the reservation it was necessary to discontinue some of the emergency relief activities; and (d) that the proposed payment would reduce the capital of this tribe to such a point that future timber operations may be seriously handicapped.

For these reasons I am withholding approval of H. R. 4539.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

On August 31, 1937:

CLEVELAND L. SHORT

H. R. 1093. I have withheld my approval from H. R. 1093, "An act for the relief of Cleveland L. Short."

This measure would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Cleveland L. Short the sum of $1,572.50 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for permanent injuries sustained by him on June 14, 1909, while employed by the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The compensation law in effect at the time Mr. Short was injured provided that, in the event of injury resulting from hazardous employment, the employee would be entitled to receive for a year thereafter the same rate of pay as if he continued to be employed, unless, in the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the employee could return to work sooner.

The record in this case shows that Mr. Short was incapacitated for 45½ days; that he returned to work after that period; and that, in accordance with the provisions of the then-existing law, he received benefits of $227.50 to cover his lost time.

The present bill provides for paying the employee the difference between $227.50 and his rate of pay for a full year, or an additional payment of $1,572.50.

Apparently this is the first bill of this kind; and if this were the only case of a full year's compensation to a Federal employee who returned to work after a disability that existed for only a portion of the year, I would have no hesitancy whatever in approving the bill, particularly in view of the fact that the employee lost a foot in the accident. But there are hundreds of cases of employees who sustained injuries during the period from May 30, 1908, to September 7, 1916, and who returned to work after varying periods of disability of less than 1 year without receiving a full year's compensation on account of such disabilities.

I therefore feel that the enactment of this bill would create a precedent which might result in numerous claims for additional compensation by others who were injured and who have received the benefits to which they were entitled under the law.

For these reasons I withhold approval of the bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

AUTHORIZING ADVANCE OF AMOUNTS DUE ON DELINQUENT HOMESTEAD ENTRIES ON CERTAIN INDIAN RESERVATIONS

H. R. 2888 is a bill to grant relief to homesteaders and purchasers of public and ceded Indian lands and to authorize advance of amounts due on delinquent homestead entries on certain Indian reservations.

Sections 1 and 2 thereof authorize the granting of leave of absence and exemption from payment of installments on the purchase price of their land to homestead settlers and entrymen who, because of economic conditions, find it necessary during the calendar year 1937 to leave their homesteads to seek employment. Section 5 would permit any entryman or purchaser of ceded Indian land to relinquish a portion of his entry or purchase so that the payments on the whole of such entry or purchase will be sufficient to complete payment on the lands retained. To these three sections I have no serious objection, in view of the previous extensions that have been granted by the Congress.

But I am unable to find any satisfactory basis for approving sections 3 and 4 of the bill. These two sections provide for the advance payment to the Indians from the general fund of the Treasury of the indebtedness of entrymen and purchasers of ceded Indian land. With the opening of these ceded Indian lands to entry, the United States accepted no responsibility to purchase or find purchasers for such lands, but acted only as a trustee to sell the lands and pay over the proceeds to the Indians. The delinquency that has occurred on the part of entrymen and purchasers in making their payments on these lands constitutes no justification for the proposed shifting from the Indians to the Government of the burden of waiting for the completion of the payments. The fact of the delinquency indicates, indeed, that this is simply the transfer of bad debts from one payee to another.

I would have no objection to the enactment of legislation that would provide for the cancelation of these entries and for the reversion of the lands to the Indians for their own use.

For the foregoing reasons I am withholding approval of H. R. 2888.

UINTAH, WHITE RIVER, AND UNCOMPAHGRE BANDS OF UTE INDIANS

H. R. 4399. I am withholding approval of H. R. 4399, authorizing an appropriation of $860,098.75 for payment to the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians for 36,223 acres of land, comprising a portion of a total area of 1,010,000 acres ceded to the Government by the Ute Indians and added to the Uintah National Forest in 1905. The Indians have been compensated for 973,777 acres of this ceded land, at $1.25 per acre, in the amount of $1,217,-221.25, under the act of February 13, 1931.

As to the area of 36,223 acres, which contains certain deposits of coal, that act directed the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the value thereof and report his findings to Congress; and in accordance therewith the Secretary reported to Congress on July 20, 1931, that the value of this area, as appraised by the United States Geological Survey, was $62,165.75.

The amount of compensation proposed in the pending bill is the amount of an appraisal made in 1910, with respect to which the Director of the Geological Survey, in a letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on January 21, 1937, states, in part, as follows:

> Such values represent, in fact, nothing more than the worth of the coal therein for purposes of immediate development. * * * As they were designed to prevent the speculative purchase and withholding from development of Federally owned coal lands, those values represent present worth only as of the date commercial development of the coal involved becomes commercially feasible. For the coal acreage here involved such date has not yet arrived and was even more remote in 1905 than at present. It is, in fact, still so far in the future as to be subject only to conjecture, with some room for doubt that it will ever arrive. * * * For the administrative purpose for which they were made, the valuations placed upon the coal acreage on the basis of Lupton's findings (appraisal of 1910) are fair and reasonable, though they are exorbitant and excessive to the point of absurdity as a measure of the present worth of the coal rights involved to the Federal Government or to any other possible purchaser.

After careful consideration of the record in this case, I am unable to reach the conclusion that the payment authorized by this bill is justified.

KLAMATH BUSINESS COMMITTEE AND OFFICIAL DELEGATES

H. R. 5975 authorizes the establishment of per-diem payments in lieu of compensation and expenses for members of the Klamath business committee and official Klamath delegates to Washington.

The legislation is objectionable because (a) the amount to be expended in any one year is unlimited; (b) there is no restriction on the number of delegates to be chosen to represent the tribe in Washington at any one time; (c) representatives of the tribe could visit Washington at will; and (d) the tribal representatives could stay in Washington for an unlimited period.

Regardless of the fact that tribal funds are involved, the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should have authority to determine the size of a delegation, and to limit the visit to a period of time necessary to complete the business in hand. Without administrative control large sums of Klamath tribal funds could be wasted by maintaining a delegation at the seat of government at times when the presence of such a delegation is wholly unnecessary.

For these reasons I am withholding approval of H. R. 5975.

WASHINGTON, D. C., AIRPORT

H. R. 7985. I am withholding approval of H. R. 7985, an act to provide for the enlargement of the so-called Washington-Hoover Airport because of the complete futility of the act.

I am compelled to do this with deep regret, because the failure to provide for an adequate airport may lead to serious accidents before one can be built.

This is a subject which has been studied, reported on, and discussed for years. The most recent study was by an airport commission this year. Three Members of the Senate, three Members of the House of Representatives, and three members appointed by the President to study all possible airfield sites—48 in number—reduced this number to 8 for further study, then to 3, and finally recommended a permanent airport on high ground at Camp Springs, Md. The principal objection to the Camp Springs site was that it was 9 miles from the center of the hotel and business district. It was located, however, on high ground not subject to river fogs.

The second choice of this commission was the Gravelly Point site, where a field adequate in size could be built, principally by the pump-and-fill method, only a short distance south of the present airport. The principal objection to the Gravelly Point site was that it was on comparatively rare occasions subject to river fogs, an objection which applies almost equally to the Washington-Hoover Airport.

Only one member of the commission favored the Washington-Hoover Field, although the evidence against it from all the experts who appeared before the commission was very strong. The Washington-Hoover Field is subject to fogs and, under the proposed bill, even with a small addition of 53 acres taken from Department of Agriculture land, would still leave this field as one of the poorest fields in the entire Nation for large planes carrying passengers and mail. This is a simple fact.

Furthermore, the bill provides for the closing of an important highway leading into the heart of the National Capital and for the lease of Government land for 50 years to a private corporation. The principal aviation field of the National Capital should not be owned or controlled by any private corporation. This in itself is sufficient justification for disapproval of the bill.

It is my thought that because of the importance of air traffic to and from the District of Columbia the Government of the United States could well afford two fields. After careful consideration I am of the belief that the Gravelly Point site should be developed for use in all good weather when they are no river fogs or bad flying conditions. This site is within 10 minutes of the center of Washington. It could be used by the large transport planes on probably 80 percent of all flying days.

At the same time I believe that the Government should develop an additional field on high land not subject to fogs. Such a field, either at Camp Springs or at some similar site, could be made ready in a very few months of work and would be used during the comparatively small number of days when the Gravelly Point site is unsafe because of river fogs.

I shall ask the Congress, immediately upon their reconvening, to take up this matter as quickly as possible.

Further, I am asking the Secretary of Commerce, until such time as a high, level field can be made available, to close the Washington-Hoover Airport to all planes whenever, in the judgment of the Bureau of Air Commerce, landing on or taking off from that field is unsafe.

If the Congress provides for a high, level field in the early part of its next session, there is no reason why such a field cannot be made available, at least for emergency use, within a comparatively short time.

Such a field, however, would of necessity be 9 or 10 miles from the center of the District, and I hope that the Congress will also see fit to develop the Gravelly Point site, which would, of course, require 2 or 3 years to complete.
